ATWATER KENT RADIO

Tone so truthful he could even tell who made Spalding's violin

"That's not a Strad..it's a Guarnerius!"

AMONG the listeners when Albert Spalding played in the Atwater Kent Radio Hour was a violin maker in Indiana.

Before Spalding finished his first number the violin maker turned to his daughter, exclaiming: "That is not a Stradivarius he's playing; it's a Guarnerius!"

Sure enough, a few minutes later the radio announcer said that the violin Spalding was using was his favorite Guarnerius.

The Indiana man was so impressed that he took the trouble to write us about it.

"My radio is an Atwater Kent Screen-Grid set," he said. "I tell you this story to show how true the reproduction is."

Think of it! Radio reproduction so true that not only can you identify each instrument that is played, but, if you are an expert, you can actually tell who made the instrument.

That is what we mean by the naturalness of an Atwater Kent. This radio does not try to improve on Spalding or any other artist. It does not exaggerate. It has no artificial "toning." It just lets you hear what you want to hear. That is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

The dress with the new gauntlet sleeves by CAROLYN

The in-coming vogue carries its charm right on its sleeve. In this new Carolyn mode, which may be had in satin or canton crepe, contrasting color emphasizes the new long-glove effect. The soft swing down to the hip is a new and flattering line, too. The perfection of this silhouette in every detail is the result of the skill and care which the Carolyn committee of nationally known stylists exercises in selecting all models given the Carolyn label.

Carolyn Modes are conservatively priced

Frocks and Gowns, $29.50, $39.50, $49.50. Coats, $39.50, $49.50. Ensembles, $39.50, $49.50, $59.50, $79.50, Junior Frocks, $25.00. Junior Coats, $39.50. Hand bags, $5.00 and $7.50. Carolyn Underwear and Hosiery in a range of prices.

ARE YOU THE PETITE TYPE ?

(meaning short with average legs, medium height with very slim legs, or a growing girl.)

If you are — Heaven knows your stocking woes have been many! Bumpy rolls above the knee, saggy seams, wrinkles about the ankles, garters clasp on the sheer part of the stocking because the garter top comes much too high. And life just one run after another!

Gordon Individually-Proportioned* Stocking Service is the answer. Different leg-sizes as well as foot-sizes, and for your type of figure — Gordon Petite. Your stockings will fit, and — wear longer.

If you are not "Petite" — Gordon Princess — fits average women, Gordon Regal — tall women, and Gordon Splendide* — those of generous proportions. Be measured — and learn which you require.

are never sold in "sales"

. . . Because Shayne prices are already as low or lower, quality for quality, than most of the "slashed" prices offered in so-called "sales" . . . and because we believe that the honor and integrity of the house from which you buy are far more important considerations than the dubious inducement of a "cut" price.

VOGUE FILM

NOW SHOWING FORTNIGHTLY

Here are two typical costumes from a recent Vogue motion picture. A smart in-between-seasons costume (at the left) is of semi-sheer crêpe in black and white. The coat has short sleeves, showing the sleeves of the dress below. The chic hat is of gros-grain. Satin for evening is a wise choice for mid-summer, since it will continue its chic through the autumn. The gown below is in pale pink and has one of the new scarfs to match.

AND NOW . . .

THE MODE IN MOTION

Vogue has stepped to the silver screen! . . . And now you can see at your favorite theatre a living, speaking mode. Vogue's mannequins and the voice of Vogue show and explain for you the newest fashions of the day.

Through motion pictures, Vogue helps you with the practical side of being smart . . . shows you how to match your accessories with several ensembles . . . how to change a coat or hat and make a whole new costume.

Clever close-ups show the new shoes . . . new ways of wearing your hats . . . new handbags and gloves. The voice of Vogue will describe the fashions in detail . . . lines, colors, fabrics and all the outstanding points of chic.

Every two weeks, Vogue's talking film brings you the clothes for country weekends . . . or perhaps, the right and wrong of evening clothes . . . or new ensembles for business, complete to the pin for your hat!

If you want to be practical about your wardrobe . . . if you want to be smart without spending a fortune . . . don't miss Vogue's talking motion pictures. They are produced by Paramount . . . and appear every fortnight at the theatres listed at the right. The fashions admired in the Vogue films may be purchased at any of the following stores.

A tuck that banishes ugliness

Smart women of America are now wearing smaller size undergarments—because of a clever tuck. A full expanding back gives to Kickernicks liberty of action and a snug fit, without bagginess. So perfectly do these models fit the form in all positions, that clumsy reinforcements are not needed to relieve strain. Long wearing garments—garments you will be unconscious of. Beautiful garments of refined workmanship. Kickernick has revolutionized the art of underdress making. A distinguished American success. Complete lines at better stores everywhere, including especially attractive and comfortable children's garments. Popular in price. Don't buy until you have seen them. Made by Winget Kickernick Company, Minneapolis, Minnesota—in smart models of modish materials. Send for booklet.

PATENTED UNDERDRESS

GOLFLEX

Our stylists returning from Paris, developed this canton crepe ensemble for two reasons . . . Without the double-breasted, fitted jacket there's a tailored afternoon dress, moulded on princess lines with the tight-fitting, long sleeves encoring at the cuffs the contrasting bow, originated at the U shaped yoke . . . With the jacket—a town or travel suit of delightful practicality and chic. In black, homage, winter brown, cricket green and rubytone with white yoke and detail . . . Created and distributed in the U. S. by Wilkin-Malito, Inc., 500 Seventh Ave., N. Y. C., and in Canada by Gould Samuel & Co., Montreal . . . Sold by all Golflex dealers . . . $39.50

CHANGE FOR AUTUMN!

NEW MODES, NEW MOVEMENTS ANIMATE THE WORLD OF FASHION!

The next issue of Vogue (New Ideas for Interior Decorating) tells you how to make your home more charming, whether you redecorate it completely or add a piece or two . . . how to bring diversity to rooms grown dull . . . shows you how to serve smartly the English breakfast and the buffet luncheon . . . brings news from Paris of new suits and coats, of delightful interchange of fur and fabric . . . shining beaded evening gowns . . . new chiffons . . . tea-gowns that trail through the dinner hour . . . tells you how to revive the tired summer wardrobe with a few well-chosen things . . . how to choose frocks that may be worn at any season! There's a blithe excitement in the air . . . the thrill of change. If you're a little bored with your summer clothes—a little restless among your old household gods . . . the forthcoming issue of Vogue will inject new interest in your life!

So Much Depends

ON THE WAY YOU PACK YOUR BAG

IN TRAVEL, as with so many things in life, the comforts we take for granted are really quite important. A deck chair in the sun . . . friends to meet one at the station . . . the reflection that tickets, visas, and cheques have all been cared for . . . these, in their aggregate, add greatly to the enjoyment of the journey. • To a man, especially, there is a not-inconsiderable pleasure in the assurance that the things in his bag lie within easy reach, neatly and tastefully arranged. He never has to hunt. And with proper cases to guard them, he knows that his cravats are still unwrinkled . . . his shirts fresh enough to wear . . . and mirror, razor and brushes exactly where he placed them, hours before. • Among men of cultivated taste, such cases are frequently of fine leather. And if it were possible for you to examine them, you would find the great majority imprinted with a tiny golden keystone R. This insignia, placed upon each article manufactured by C. F. Rumpp & Sons, Inc., is the symbol of a high tradition. • That tradition derives from a belief, held by the founder, that only the finest leather goods should go out from this establishment. Today, members of the same family are actively engaged in the direction of the firm . . . and are dedicated to the same resolve. • C. F. Rumpp & Sons, Inc., manufacture fine leather articles of every description, excepting luggage. They may be had at the better haberdashers' stores, at leather goods stores, department stores, jewelers, and stationers.

A . . . A toilet case, in pigskin, lined with scarlet leather and equipped to open with a slide fastener. Fittings are of ebony and black celluloid. It may be had in a variety of other leathers.

B . . . A combination handkerchief, neckwear, and collar case in pigskin, lined with ecru moire silk. The case is made with a collapsible folding gusset.

C . . . A neckwear case, in pigskin, lined with ecru moire silk. The case may be had in other leathers, with other linings.

Free Wheeling! You need not use the clutch except to start or back up

FREE wheeling, latest of Studebaker's many engineering advancements, takes half the fatiguing footwork out of driving. Gone are the nervous strain and physical strain of constant gear shifting—you need use the clutch only to start or back up!

Here is the first car created, which a woman can drive all day, yet leave serene and fresh as when she entered it. It is the first car literally to float along, in gear and fully controlled, yet free and silent as though there were no gears.

We know you'll like this different car. You'll like the smart new beauty of its contours and appointments—its longer wheelbase and wider doors, seats and windows—its slim, silvery radiator, Ovaloid headlamps, and tiny parking lamps gleaming on its broad, sweeping fenders. You'll like the spirited speed of its 122 horsepower World Champion engine, and the indescribable thrill and thrift of free wheeling. Take one and drive it—today!

NEW SERIES STUDEBAKER EIGHT

You will find lasting protection in the new fitted, softer Kotex

Costumes from Kaskel & Kaskel Dunlap

Kotex deodorizes; Kotex is softer, more absorbent, and thus adds both daintiness and comfort to sanitary protection.

YOU want a feeling of security and safety in sanitary protection. But you want even more than that, and Kotex gives you more.

First of all, it deodorizes, keeps you dainty, fresh, immaculate at times when that is doubly important. It is fashioned to fit securely. Under the closest fitting gown it is inconspicuous—a fact that smart women are quick to appreciate.

Lasting softness

Kotex is so soft, so comfortable after hours of wear. Many pads may seem comfortable at first, but they soon become stiff and chafing. Kotex stays soft, because it is made of a most unusual substance, known as Cellucotton (not cotton) absorbent wadding. This is the very same absorbent used by 85% of our great hospitals today. It is not cotton, but a cellulose substance which, for sanitary purposes, performs the same function as the softest cotton—with five times the absorbency.

When you think it over, the fact that great hospitals use Kotex is your most important assurance that it is best for personal use. Hospitals—with their high medical standards—are careful to use only the best, the most comfort-giving, the most hygienic protection for patients. By choosing Kotex you assure yourself the same care that leading hospitals give. And it costs so little that home-made cotton and cheesecloth substitutes, far from being an economy, are actually an extravagance.

Kotex is disposable

And don't forget that Kotex is easily disposable. That alone has changed the hygienic habits of women all over the world. Once you try it, you, too, will change to this newer, smarter sanitary method. Kotex Company, Chicago, Illinois.

IN HOSPITALS

- 1 85% of our leading hospitals use the very same absorbent of which Kotex is made.
- 2 Kotex is soft . . . Not a deceptive softness, that soon packs into chafing hardness. But a delicate, fleecy softness that lasts for hours.
- 3 Safe, secure . . . keeps your mind at ease.
- 4 Deodorizes . . . safely, thoroughly, by a special process.
- 5 Disposable, instantly, completely.

Regular Kotex—45c for 12
Kotex Super-Size—65c for 12

Also regular size singly in vending cabinets through West Disinfecting Co.

THROUGH JEWELLED INDIA . . . in Pullman "Suites"

NOW the world's most unusual travel experience is also the most luxurious! You travel like a Rajah, with fare-exempt quarters for your Indian servants. When you wish, your pullman suites are your stop-over bungalows. India offers the world's cheapest rail mileage . . . one of the longest main-line electrifications in the world . . . first-class European hotels.

English-speaking guides smooth your way to Delhi's fabulous Diwan-i-Khas . . . to Golconda's ruins . . . to the gem-studded marble-and-alabaster Taj Mahal . . . to Udaipur's matchless beauty . . . to Amritsar's golden temple.

You wander among perfumed fountains and marble terraces. You tennis and "tiffin" at smart Darjeeling . . . see strange festival processions, the holy Granth canopied with pure gold and thickly set with diamonds, rubies, pearls. The rich bazaars of Calcutta and Jaipur spill treasure for you in hand-cut precious stones, gold-threaded tapestries . . . jewel-inlaid marble work. In Bombay, the world's largest sapphires gleam from the eyes of a stone god. You ride silver-belled elephants . . . watch gold-ankleted street dancers. For you, jeweled India studs tropic nights with fireflies and stars . . . clothes Himalaya's snows in roseate gold. For you, fleet British trains open a luxury unknown in Continental travel. TR AVEL is so supremely comfortable in a Fisher Body car because in the very design and construction of Body by Fisher so much forethought is given to riding and driving ease. Every Fisher Body car, whatever its type or price, is especially roomy. Fisher upholstery is as luxurious as it is durable and beautiful. Fisher cushions are deep, resilient and restfully form-fitting. And Fisher rattle-proof wood-and-steel type of construction assures a quietness which is not characteristic of other types of body construction. These, and other features of extra value, such as the Fisher non-glare vision and ventilating windshield and the Fisher adjustable driver's seat, contribute importantly to that supreme motoring enjoyment which you experience in General Motors cars —the only cars with Body by Fisher.

a new BEAUTY TECHNIQUE

... a technique for [★]Facial Rejuvenation

THERE are two distinct needs for facial rejuvenation . . . first, to quickly restore Freshness after a strenuous day when every face, young or older, looks jaded, tired, unattractive. Second, to restore Youthfulness after the fresh look of girlhood begins to fade; when the skin loses its smooth firmness; little lines appear; and facial muscles relax; a trace of double chin appears and the drawn, tired, jaded look seems to become permanent.

A New Clasmic Pack, Boncilla's masterpiece, the original formula improved, refined and suited to the most delicate skin, is a most potent facial rejuvenator and is so recognized by prominent beauty specialists the world over. It is a regenerating, creative process—a thing apart from all ordinary cosmetics.

Boncilla's new technique includes a complete ensemble of toilet requisites, each essential for a specific purpose. Used with Clasmic Pack they provide the most modern scientific way to preserve and enhance youthful loveliness.

Here is the New ENSEMBLE . . .

of Toilet Requisites—As your skin responds quickly and amazingly to this New Boncilla Technique of Facial Rejuvenation . . . just so will your appreciation of the fine things respond to the smart beauty of these colorful containers done for you in the modern manner.

No matter where you go, you will not find finer toiletries more smartly packaged and you can have them now without extravagant expenditures—offered in the better stores and shops throughout the world.

This Mark
is Boncilla's symbol of promise to you of supreme quality and chaste purity in the things that contribute so much to your loveliness.
Engraved on every Boncilla package

NEW—SMART—MODERN

SEE these Mark 2 Toiletries in their glistening Jackets of polished metal, colorful enamel and sparkling glass.

Sold at the better toilette goods counters throughout the world.

Professional application of the new Boncilla facial rejuvenation is also to be had in the leading salons where Clasmic Pack is regarded as the very foundation cosmetic for new beauty rejuvenation.

Boncilla Clasmic Pack

Instructions for home use in every package.

Price of packages in stores $1.00 $3.50

Treatments in leading salons $3.00

Boncilla Cold Cream . . . $1.00

All of purity—and goodness that can be put in a night cream to smooth and soothe the skin.

Boncilla Cremetone . . . 1.50

A liquid cream for quick, easy application. Tones the skin. May be used instead of Cold Cream after pack treatment.

Boncilla Astringent . . . 1.50

To close pores, firm the tissues and reduce oiliness and to be used following cold cream in Clasmic Pack treatment.

Boncilla Foundation Cream. 1.00

A disappearing cream base for face powder. Prevents powder getting into pores.

Boncilla Face Powder. . . 1.00

Air floated through finest silk mesh, temperature blended. A moisture proof powder of exquisite fragrance.
Shades: Flesh-Naturelle; Cream-Rachel; Blanc-White.

Boncilla Cleansing Cream . 1.00

Melts with the warmth of the skin, penetrates the pores, dissolves and dislodges the impurities which cause blackheads.

Boncilla Nourishing Cream. 1.50

A rich cream skin food, especially good for dry skin.

Boncilla Rouge50

Hand made therefore of a more velvety texture, easier applied and blends perfectly.
Shades: Rubine, Oriole, Poppy, Sheik.

Boncilla Lip Stick 1.00

In shades to match your rouge. Keeps the lips soft and smooth.

★ The Century Dictionary defines "REJUVENATE" as . . . "To restore the appearance . . . of youth; to make as if young again; renew; refresh."

... and to faithful users, Boncilla promises just that.

AN address of a new lingerie shop, or, rather, one that is not so well known because it is not so easily found, is always something every woman wants to know. At the shop of Lina Dussupt, 17 rue des Pyramides, one will find charming models of lingerie of all kinds—nightgowns, pyjamas, tea-gowns, dressing-gowns, and, especially, short bed-jackets.

CHEZ MOI is the name of an attractive little shop at 24 avenue Montaigne, owned by Mrs. Julian Allen, formerly Mrs. Charles Dillingham, a charming American who is prominent in Paris society. Here may be found antique furniture, china, porcelain, books, bottles, lamps, and many attractive and inexpensive gifts. She makes very lovely lamp-shades of printed taffeta, with pastel flowers on a white background, which are not only decorative, but also perfect for bedside reading-lamps, as the electric bulbs are attached to the frame of the shade and can be turned to one side or another.

ONE of the smart new night-clubs opened recently in Paris is "Monseigneur," in the rue d'Amsterdam. It is attractively decorated, with walls of bright dark blue satin and colour accents of red satin. The entertainment is excellent.

That Youngest Generation

Is your child a young sophisticate . . . poised with the grown-ups . . . haughty with the governess . . . a bit condescending to the fairy tales of his imagination—and Grimm's? Is he eager to know other children, yet wistfully shy of them?

Why not enroll him now in a primary school for next fall? You owe it to him to let him grow up naturally, with his own generation . . . to have him taught how to play—and work—with others.

Every fortnight Vogue introduces to you on these pages some of the finest schools in the country. The Condé Nast Educational Bureau has personally investigated them all. They are staffed by intelligent men and women who understand young children and their problems—physical and moral as well as mental. These schools attract only the type of children who would make worthwhile associates for your own son or daughter. They retain high academic standards that prepare the child for more intensive studies in secondary schools.

Sent to one of these schools, your child will be given every opportunity to develop character and leadership . . . he will be encouraged in sports and manual training . . . he will begin a cultural development that will be carried on throughout his entire life.

Why not write to some of these schools for literature? You may find in one of them exactly what you require of a school for your child. Should you desire further information, let us know. We shall be glad to help you in any educational problem you may have.

YOUR SON

You want him to have all the advantages that you can give him, the best training, the best friends. And yet you do not want him helped too much, over-indulged, soft, isolated. What could be better for him than a good school, where he will meet and know men who have made his problems their life study?

Why not write to several of the schools represented here? . . . They all possess distinctive advantages.

And if you want the benefit of our long knowledge and acquaintance with schools, write to us. We shall be glad to put our information at your disposal.

GREENWICH CONNECTICUT

WITH PALE AND FESSE... SALTIRE AND CHEVRON

Strange terms these to the lay ear, yet quite familiar to students of heraldry. Necessarily familiar to Brock and Company, for strict observance of detail distinguishes all heraldic engraving by this house. Illustrated, a ring of green gold and Carnelian bearing in reverse an heraldic pelican, for use as a seal. Lapis Lazuli, Sardonyx, Bloodstone, and New Zealand Jade are also appropriate for engraving with coat of arms.

VOGUE'S - EYE VIEW OF THE MODE

THE fashion-wise eye of Vogue sees elegance as the key-note of the coming mode. Real elegance, not to be confused with dressiness, fanciness, or extravagance. Ermine at the breakfast table or velvet in the rain is not elegance; beaded fringe in the afternoon is merely ridiculous; trailing ends have no place in the subway. True elegance has no fool-proof formula. It is built on fitness, and discrimination is its guiding quality. It graces experience as well as youth. Graciousness and dignity of manners are its complements. It includes chic, and soars beyond and above it, and is polished by the fine patin  of sophistication, its very subtlety passing for simplicity to the uninitiated.

Richer fabrics, handled with greater freedom; the increasing use of supple furs; more insistence on colour; a subtle elaboration of line and detail; aristocratic handwork—here are the most striking manifestations of the trend of fashion.

It is a mode of infinite possibilities, but it lays down rigid laws. You will have to change your clothes more often; you will need to take meticulous care of your new dresses. If your activities bar the more material manifestations of luxury, you must find a way to achieve the effect of elegance by subtle means—by the cut of your clothes, by your manner, and by the wise choice of personal and interesting accessories. This is, above all, the mode for the great lady, though she may be a very young person indeed.

von Horn

Mrs. Wanamaker, the former Miss Alix Van Rensselaer Devereux, had one of the most brilliant weddings of the season, early in June. She is the daughter of Mrs. Radcliffe Cheston, junior, of Orelan, Pennsylvania

VOGUE'S GUIDE TO THE NEW LAND OF FASHION

A new Land of Fashion is being opened up, and you are about to enter into a realm of Great Elegance, such as none of us has travelled in for a long time.

Only those who have sure fashion instinct will be able to find their way without a guide. Paths lie through Intricacy of Technique and Elaboration of Line and Detail; and rich fabrics and lustrous furs are all over the place. All of which provide traps and pitfalls for the unwary and open up endless possibilities for the woman with individuality and good taste.

Anything that is easy and obvious will be promptly dropped by the way; and the sports influence will not be allowed in town, but will keep to its place.

GENERAL DIRECTIONS

Follow the Natural Lines of Proportion wherever you go, and stop at the Natural Waist-line any time of day or night. All good roads start from or pass through this point.

The regions just above and below the waist-line are full of interest and serve both to stress, by contrast, the slimness of the waist and to distract your attention from this point.

The way of the Silhouette will be long, but will be interrupted by tunics, tiers, drapery, and wrap-around effects that will afford great variety and interest on the trip.

Skirt lengths will vary, slightly, from the ones you are following now. They will be slightly longer for sports and for day; and, for general evening wear, they will definitely clear the floor. Shoulder interest will emphasize the slimness of waists and hips and balance the width of skirts.

Fulness will often be concentrated at one given point, and the natural outline of the figure will somewhere be definitely defined. Sometimes, fulness will be carried to one side, in costumes for the day.

CHANEL—FROM JAY-THORPE

In Chanel's "650," a new dress of white georgette crêpe, controlled fulness is beautifully illustrated. Fine pleating maintains smooth lines through the bodice and hips, releasing the circular width of the skirt towards the front in a sun-pleated effect

 Frequently, in the evening, fulness will be drawn to the back; again, it will be centered both front and back; and, in many cases, it will be completely controlled through the hips and gradually released below.

Drapery will develop in importance and may be localized at one or more points—at the back, on the shoulders, at one side. Often, it will take a twisted course.

An enveloping movement that is carried well around to the side is the newest manifestation of crossed and wrapped effects.

 Watch out for one-sided effects. Asymmetrical treatment can usually be counted on to indicate that you are going in the right way.

Notice that the approach to many a good dress or coat will be from the back. Back bodice interest and back fulness will give importance to this side of the mode.

A new and devious raglan cut will provide a great deal of shoulder and back interest, even to the more formal type of coat.

 Fabrics will grow richer in texture and more lustrous, even for day; and they will often acquire a sumptuous quality at night. Satins and velvets are indigenous here.

 Black will retreat a little before your advance, and deep colours will step up to fill its place. The best of these shades, for day, will be almost as dark as black.

Augustabernard has used drapery and sun pleating in "815," both interpreted with great finesse. This dress is of heavy satin-backed crêpe in turquoise-blue and has great dignity and beauty. The material is twisted around the edge of the V décolletage

AUGUSTABERNARD—FROM FRANKLIN SIMON

SUN PLEATING AND DRAPED DÉCOLLETAGE

Jewel-like colours will gleam by night.

You are going to run across many contrasts in colour and fabrics. Don't be surprised if you meet dark dresses with light tops or if you find two fabrics in one model—it's quite in the best tradition of the land.

Light coats with dark fur and dark coats with light fur will play another game around this same idea.

One of the most interesting things to observe on your journey will be the new and charming use of fur. It will be treated as a fabric and encrusted in a sophisticated and subtle way. It will be used as belts and in narrow bands to trim edges; and it will peer from under collars and cuffs.

Fur may encroach on the suit to such an extent that it will form the greater part of the jacket, and all-fur coats will have encrustations of fabric. Frequently, the rôles of fabric and fur will be reversed.

The country will be full of flat, supple furs—much breitschwantz, much ermine (dipped all shades), the flat curly lambs, beaver, sealskin, and dyed squirrel. Obvious masses of fur will look démodé, and foxes will keep under cover most of the day.

Fur collars will be much less massive and voluminous than they were last year, and the surplus fur will be apt to reappear as wide flat revers—often with a one-sided effect in conjunction with the surplice closing of a dress-like coat or coat-dress.

Fur scarfs and neck-pieces will continue into autumn and will sometimes develop into gilets that are worn with jackets and coats.

Coats, coat-dresses, and suits, all of great charm, and dignity and unexpected formality, will be the newest and most important equipment for the trip.

Coat-dresses will be excellent for autumn and may be worn later with a fur coat or jacket to match the fur trimming that will be one of their special claims to distinction.

Watch carefully or you will be apt to mistake a coat for a dress and a dress for a coat. Both are apt to have wrap-around skirts of circular cut.

THE JOURNEY THROUGH THE DAY

Both coats and dresses are very definitely fastened at the waist-line, often with a draped belt, sometimes with an encrusted fur band that ties at the side. Bolero cut, surplice closing, fur encrustations, and fur revers are other points that are liable to confuse you between the two.

Coats will be as long as the average dress.

Suits will bloom luxuriantly through the winter months, and their jackets will increase several inches in length, as you may see from various illustrations on the following pages.

Ensembles must be looked at from a new point of view. Usually, the coat and dress are going to be quite independent of each other, and no longer will you be able to count on recognizing their relationship by similarity of fabric, colour, or cut. Rather, a certain harmony of spirit will connect the two.

In a new version of the old ensemble idea, the rôles of dress and coat will be reversed, and the dress will be the more important. Often, the fur collar of the dress will serve as the collar of the coat.

The dress and short-jacket ensemble will continue through the autumn and may be worn on moderate winter days.

Plan to spend a long time on the bodice, for you will find more of interest there than ever before. Bolero cut, surplice closings, soft drapery, revers, jabots, and bertha collars may interrupt and delay your course, but you will often make up for lost time by a smooth raglan or kimono cut. And, while you are there, don't forget to take a look at the back.

Blouses will provide one of the great industries of this country, for they are going to depend upon fine and lovely hand-work for much of their importance and shape.

Dressmaking Details will be at hand whenever they can be of some use. Pin-tucking, shirring, sun pleating, and box pleating can be called upon to help whenever they are needed to get a dress into shape. Beautiful hand-work will be much prized.

Don't hesitate to follow a wrapped skirt well around, and don't be surprised if these are often circular or sectional in cut.

Sleeves will continue to go to all odd lengths, and sleeve interest will spring up in your path, every now and then, to the frequent confusion of those who are not fashion-wise.

Peplums, on the newest dresses, will grow into tunics, but they will come out on jackets only a few inches longer than they did in the spring. Tunics usually develop from the skirt, though, now and then, one will be a prolongation of the bodice or blouse.

Boleros, on both dresses and coats will be one (Continued on page 95)

A SUIT AND A COAT-DRESS IN THE NEW FORMAL MANNER

The formal type of dressmaker suit for winter may be of midnight-blue velvet with a collar of white ermine, like this Augustabernard model, "830." "Dominique," Lucile Paray's smart coat-dress of black broadcloth, has a draped and tied belt, a crossed bodice, and a shawl collar of supple black breitschwantz

TOWN CLOTHES WILL BE MORE FORMAL

LOUISEBOULANGER—FROM BEST

Hoyningen-Huene, Paris

In this coat, "370," and the dress, "327," Vionnet makes a new use of white fur on a dark fabric in the application of ermine as a narrow border on a blackish-green broadcloth coat and on the large collar of the dress to match. With a bodice that closes in a surplice line with soft drapery below the waist-line, the dress is smartly finished by the collar tying outside the collarless coat. Black felt beret from Marie-Alphon-sine; posed by Lillian Fisher

WHITE FUR ON A DARK GROUND'

Two outstanding features of the coming mode are seen in this coat, "6084," from Vionnet. One is the use of dark fur as a collar and cuffs on a light coat—here, blackish-brown astrakhan on putty-beige broadcloth. The second is the one-sided wrapping that ends under the arm. Wide raglan sleeves balance the flared fulness of the skirt, and both emphasize the slimness of the waist-line. Brown velvet toque from Reboux; bag from Vionnet

AUGUSTABERNARD COSTUME-FROM HATTIE CARNEGIE

von Horn

Augustabernard made this distinguished costume—a short coat with a wide collar set back from the face and a dress that is a triumph of the diagonal cut typical of this house. There is a slight exaggeration of length on one side, and red camellias add colour to the all-white dress of shining artificial satin, which emphasizes the revival of lustrous fabrics

THE HEIGHT OF FASHION

COUNTER ATTRACTIONS

ACCESSORIES FROM THE NEW YORK SHOPS

HATS: The outstanding millinery fashion of the summer of 1930 is the crocheted beret of white cotton with a little ribbon bow. All the smart world wears it—in town, in the country, at the races, everywhere. In town, it is smartest with a black costume or a costume in black with a white polka-dot. Although not universally becoming, this little hat is universally chic, and it is to be found in various shops. Other berets, too, are much in evidence, and some adorable ones in amusing fabrics are shown in Altman's hat department. Velvet, plain or finely ribbed, is the newest, and these berets are very light in weight, being lined with chiffon.

Blouses: The Augustabernard chiffon blouses have captivated the world. Nothing excels them for delicacy and sheer femininity. At the right we show one from Altman, of white chiffon with an intricate design in hand-sewed tucking. Light as a feather, delicate, and becoming, it is the perfect complement to your summer silk suit, and you shouldn't be without one or two. In the blouse department of the Tailored Woman's shop on Fifth Avenue, you will find innumerable smart blouses of every description, for every sort of occasion. The one illustrated at the right is of pale chartreuse crêpe de Chine and is finely hemstitched. It would be equally smart with a suit of silk or light-weight woollen, and its collar would be flattering to almost any woman. A number of blouses such as this brings infinite variety to the summer wardrobe and infinite chic to the wearer.

Accessories: Belts have more than come into their own, along with the natural waist-line. If you have a waist-line, you want to accent it, and, furthermore, practically everything is belted. At Lord and Taylor's, you'll find belts for your tennis dress, your chiffon dress, and for your tweed coat—in many cases matched to a bag. At the left, a yellow and white linen belt and a bag to match are illustrated, buckled with crystal. And the same sketch shows a green leather belt for your tweed coat. At the same shop, a smart new clasp from Maggy Rouff, wide enough to run a scarf through, is being copied. It is three times the size of the old ones, but very delicate in outline, with rhinestones and a turquoise.

Special Departments: Both the department stores and the larger specialty shops are continuing to develop amusing little shops within the shop and special departments where the shopper finds concentrated consideration of special needs. Saks-Fifth Avenue has gone ahead with the very wise idea of "ensembling" the entire shop. On the seventh floor, you find the Au Tricot shop, where you can assemble a smart sports costume in the blink of an eye. This method gives you an ensemble that is distinctively your own. The sketch at the left illustrates a little ensemble that we put together ourselves, consisting of a smartly gored skirt of pale green diagonal tweed of the softish kind, a becoming beret of exactly the same material, and a cardigan basquet knit sweater in the same colour. You can find, also, the (Continued on page 84)

CHILDREN'S PARTIES

BY DOROTHY M. AUCHINCLOSS

WHEN Renée Martin entered her very modern and colourful front hall late one afternoon and saw a delicate yellow envelope addressed to her four-year-old daughter, she was surprised. When she opened the envelope and a fluffy flannel chicken with a note in its beak fell out, she knew that that which she had been dreading had happened. Nancy was to go to parties, and, what was worse, Nancy's nurse would have to calm an excited child after the party and Nancy's Mamma would soon have to bestir her imagination and think up a party for Nancy to give.

Nancy's first party was a Bird Party. There were about fifteen children between the ages of three and five, and the party was to start at four and end, after supper, at six-thirty. Nancy was shy and miserable until she saw the costume that she was to wear. Each child was given a hat shaped like a bird's head and a pair of wings that fitted across the shoulders. The children were thrilled with them and fluttered and flapped their wings like little sparrows. Next, they built the nest of the bird and rolled a huge papier-maché egg into it. Then, when they grew tired of the circle games and it became time for the little birds to be hatched, each child was given a tiny basket and told to hunt all over the room for the hidden chicks.

After great excitement, all the chicks were found, the prize, a knowing-looking bath-towel rooster, was presented to the most successful hunter, and every one gathered round the supper table. The table looked exactly as though a flock of birds had flown in from the aviary in the park.

Cockatoos perched on glasses of milk, peacocks strutted upon place-cards, roosters crowed from the coloured crackers, and, in the middle of the table, a huge robin nestled in false security on top of a Jack Horner Pie. The inevitable cereal was brought on and, in the excitement of opening the pie, was consumed without protest and quickly followed by a flight of vanilla ice-cream snowbirds. After supper, Nancy was brought home, tired and sleepy, but as eager for more as any débutante.

"More" came a few weeks later in the shape of an invitation to a Clown Party. The clown's smiling face grinned disarmingly from the invitation card, but Renée, who had bad memories of clowns, was not reassured. She remembered one disastrous party in her early youth when a clown had played clumsy tricks for her special benefit until he had scared her into hysterics and a fever. Therefore, she took Nancy to the party with considerable apprehension.

AT PARTIES, CHILDREN CAN BE LITTLE DEVILS OR ANGELS

One look at the clown showed her that she need not worry. This was not that kind of a clown. He did wonderful tricks with handkerchiefs and eggs and coloured balls, and he was gay, foolish, and boisterous, as a clown should be, but he never for a minute lost touch with his youthful audience or frightened them. He made the children feel that they were helping him, but he never made one small person more conspicuous by his attentions than another, so that every one could enjoy the show in peace without the dreadful feeling that he might be the next victim.

Above all, this clown wore, strapped around his knee in lieu of a wrist-watch, a large and voluble alarm-clock that kept interrupting the performance by striking impossible hours in strident tones. The children adored him. They soon lost the pretty imported favours on the supper table, and they forgot the name of their hostess, but, for weeks, they talked among themselves of that wonderful clown and his clamorous watch.

By the time Nancy had been to a few more parties, Renée had stopped worrying about her being lonely and shy. Therefore, when a very damp and disorderly child was brought into her drawing-room one afternoon and set sobbing among the magazines on the sofa, she could not imagine what had happened. After listening to a gasping story about a monkey, she gave up the unequal struggle and called Miss Grimes to explain. Miss Grimes, though indignant, was slightly more coherent than her small and frightened charge, and the mystery was very soon cleared up.

It transpired that Nancy's hostess, of whom Miss Grimes held no good opinion, had thought it would be "so nice" to have a trained chimpanzee to entertain the children. It would be much less trouble than having them playing noisy games and hunting things all over the house. So she had made the necessary arrangements and felt very complacent—until the chimpanzee appeared at the party. As he was led into the end of the room where the small, unsuspecting guests were gathered, there was an immediate stampede. With one accord, the children fled through the tangle of gold cane chairs and out into the safe, light hall and demanded in every tone and key to be taken home. Most of them capitulated, when the lights had been turned on and the monkey removed, but Nancy left, never to return.

Renée decided that before giving Nancy's party she had better freshen up her ideas, which seemed to be shamefully old-fashioned. She was used to (Continued on page 82)

MOGOSOËA

A VISIT TO THE
PRINCESSE BIBESCO

Wells

BEFORE my arrival at Mogosoëa, the palace of the Princesse Bibesco, close to Bucharest, I wondered what was so mysterious about the beauty of this great Roumanian house, built in the seventeenth century by the Prince of Valachia. "C'est une féerie," a Pole told me. "C'est un rêve," an Italian raved. "What are your plans for the summer? You must come to either Posada or Mogosoëa," said the author of Catherine-Paris herself.

So one morning, her husband, the Prince George Bibesco, met me at the train in Bucharest. Leaving the road, a long, smooth, lime-tree lined avenue passes through the park, curves by an ancient little Greek Orthodox chapel, and under the arch of a towered wall. Framed within the arch stands a Venetian palace of pale amber-rose brick, with columns carved in oblique curves and balconies under a blue slate roof. At the first amazed glance, Mogosoëa appears small, an optical illusion similar to that received when seeing for the first time the small perfection of a Greek temple. At the left, a warmly veined ivory marble stairway, the pedestals mounted by rare little Byzantine stone beasts, rises to end under a dome in a ceiling where the age-old frescoes of formal decoration can still be seen, faded to grey and rose.

The usual entrance is through a beautifully grilled door on the ground level, a door framed by ancient carving flowered in (Continued on page 90)

Standing on the gold mosaic floor of the vestibule of Princesse Bibesco's house, one looks into two arcaded lounges, one of which is shown in the photograph below. There are silver divans and flowers in dark bowls or sombre vases. Throughout the house, one sees the charming taste of this charming author of "Catherine-Paris"

FROM HATTIE CARNEGIE • DESCAT, FROM BERGDORF GOODMAN

All-white hats worn with black costumes are the smartest note of the summer season in both Paris and New York. This chic example is a turban of white wool-and-silk with a bow-knot of white velvet at the side. The black crêpe roma suit from Patou, which forms a striking accompaniment, has a narrow, knotted scarf neck-line that is very flattering

This black grosgrain hat designed by Rose Descat is one of the many made of fabric, rather than felt or straw. It has a shallow crown and a brim that widens on one side. The dress from Yvonne Cayette is of pale blue and black printed silk with above-the-elbow sleeves. The beige gloves wrinkled to just below the elbow are typical of the summer

COUNTRY HATS

The white Panama hat from Rose Descat—of a type that many smart women are wearing in the country—has a shallow crown and a medium-sized brim deeply scooped at the back, narrowing in front, where it overlaps. It is illustrated with a suit of rose-and-white handkerchief linen, a crisp white batiste blouse, and white pull-on gloves wrinkled at the wrist

Reboux designed this turban of ingenuous simplicity, made of white jersey, shirred and held in place by narrow strips of the material. With the white shantung dress, made with short sleeves and designed by Worth, it is perfect for the country, but it would be equally smart worn, like the turban shown on the opposite page, with a dark dress in town

OF PANAMA AND SHIRRED JERSEY

- In the evening at any of the cooler resorts, these models are excellent. A blouse tucked into the skirt is the very new detail borrowed from the day-time mode by the two-piece evening gown of white crêpe roma at the lower left. The blouse is attached to a slip, and incrustations mould the wrap-around skirt
- Lingerie touches, too, appear in the evening, in the shape of finely tucked white organdie ruffles on the slim black crêpe roma frock shown in the middle, below. The simple, untrimmed bodice follows the lines of the figure closely
- Wide unpressed pleats are a surprising evening detail on the white crêpe dress shown at the lower right—a model of tailored simplicity. A large flower of black and white muslin and velvet is an unusual accessory, and the straight, rather long black velvet jacket completes this evening ensemble

- “You-You,” shown in the background, has a jersey dress in two shades of green, with a white piqué collar, and a three-quarters coat trimmed with beaver
- In the suit shown next to the right, mulberry-red angora tweed flecked in white fashions the coat and skirt, and heavy white crêpe is used for the blouse. Mulberry and white grosgrain ribbons form an unusual trimming
- The dark brown wool crêpe dress at the right is worn with a striped knitted jacket in brown and yellow, which blouses and ties smartly in front

HORSE-SHOWS

A HYMN OF HATE

BY CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER

THERE is no surer way to develop an incipient inferiority complex than to find oneself amid a group of people who are experts on something about which one knows nothing. Fanatics on any subject from Renaissance painting to postage-stamps make me feel shy and undeveloped; and when their hobbies turn to horses (the play on words is not intentional), my self-confidence crumbles, and I feel like a waif watching a royal garden-party through the postern gate. I could comport myself well enough at tea with Mr. Berenson, provided he'd ever ask me to tea; I might even live through a philatelist's banquet, giving merely the impression of being ignorant, but willing to learn. For Mr. Berenson might talk about the weather, and a philatelist, an Anglo-Saxon philatelist, at least, speaks English.

When it comes, however, to horse-shows, I am lost in a maelstrom of people who not only refuse to discuss anything but horses, but who do so in the horse language—an interesting patois bearing about the same relation to English as Provençal does to French. I used to glare with envy at the bright football girl who understood all the technical moves on the gridiron and let half the stadium know it, while I, who understood nothing but a drop-kick, could merely yell when my escort yelled, look sad when he groaned, and refrain from comment. But the horse-show crowd neither yells nor groans. It breaks forth into gloved applause at surprising moments, and in the intervals, which are longer than the acts of "Parsifal," one must talk about the horses with more fervour than if they were Rembrandts, study the program, mark it with a pencil (I generally draw daisies), and watch the entries (just a difficult way of saying "horses") with a sparkling look of excitement, as if they were likely to do anything other than walk, trot, canter, and occasionally stumble.

Horse-shows came into my life late. Like swimming or languages or toe-dancing, one should begin them young. The horse-sense should be acquired along with second teeth and the reading of Little Black Sambo, for the lack of it is no less an affliction than colour-blindness or tone-deafness. I can distinguish colours, I can carry any tune except the "Star Spangled Banner," I can even go to a dog-show and successfully differentiate the Saint Bernard from the Mexican hairless; but, between two brown quadrupeds, both with tails, both without manes, both as alike as the Dolly Sisters (though not as chic), one of whom is given the blue ribbon, the other the gate, I can not possibly tell the difference, nor do I in the slightest degree care. I have tried to care. I have said to myself, "There is a horse!" and looked gallant and open-air about it. But it's just like lashing myself into liking prunes. I'd really rather watch a good auction or a window where they make cigarettes.

It wouldn't be so difficult if they didn't last so long and if I weren't always the guest of people who have come to see a particular Irish hunter in the final class. Not that this hunter is in the least distinguishable from an American one. He doesn't whinny in a brogue, nor can he dance a jig. His claim to fame seems to be that he is more like a hunter than any other hunter and, as a reward, at countless shows has received a collection of ribbons. And for these pastoral reasons, my friends are willing, nay glad, to wait four, five hours just to see this paragon with more anticipation than if he were Pegasus. The final class, by the way, is scheduled for five P. M., but this is merely a quaint old sporting tradition, as the hours of the events (they sometimes call them "events"—this, too, is just a form of speech) appear to have been set by the Paris clocks. A class called "Horses Suitable to Become Hunters" (having passed their college board) is scheduled for two P. M., and, at three-fifteen P. M., they haven't even started the "Ladies' Saddle Horses" whose act should have gone on at one.

But to the horse-lover, there is no such thing as time. To the dissenter, like myself, whose acquaintance with horses is limited to the (Continued on page 94)

GARDENERS AT WORK

IN THEIR GARDENS

MRS. OLIVER ISELIN, IN HER GARDEN AT WESTBURY, LONG ISLAND

• The garden that is worked in by its owner is always the nicest garden. You can never get the fullest satisfaction out of a place until you have had your fingers in its loam. Peonies are never your peonies until you have felt the frost under the leaf mould when they are uncovered in the spring. You can never properly boast about your roses until you have squirted a marauding rosebug in the eye or tied up a straying rambler some swooning summer day when the mail-planes are droning overhead. Flowers are sympathetic creatures. Gardens brought up by hand grow very like their gardeners.

A MAN'S FLAT IN PARIS, COMPACT AS A SEAGOING YACHT

- This corner dining-table, right, is the solution of the problem of seating six people in a very tiny room and still leaving space for a servant to pass. The walls, curtains, and carpet are in beige, the table and chairs are lacquered brown, and the banquette is upholstered in zebra-striped fabric.
- The narrow corridor, shown below, is fitted like a gangway on a yacht. A rail beneath the mirror holds rugs and coats.

Sonia, Paris

STARTING with rooms completely empty and undecorated, with no furniture and possessions that had to be used up and fitted in, the possessor of this bachelor flat in Paris had a free hand except in one particular—the question of money. The problem of the decoration and furnishing of the flat was particularly interesting because it was done complete—painting, curtains, carpets, upholstery, furniture, bedding, and table appointments, even the batterie de cuisine—for the sum of forty-five thousand francs, or about eighteen hundred dollars.

The flat in question is typical of the very small modern flats in Paris that are being built in Neuilly and Auteuil. Another limitation, therefore, was that of space; the rooms were so small that they had to be furnished in a manner that would give the greatest possible sense of space and, at the same time, provide cupboard space where cupboard space did not exist, for the small flat in France does not have such conveniences as built-in cupboards in the bedrooms.

It was decided that the decoration of the flat must be “modern,” because to buy even a few pieces of antique furniture was out of the question when the entire flat had to be done on a small sum of money. The next decision was that the walls, ceilings, and woodwork should be painted one colour, a light, warm beige, throughout the entire flat, because this would also add to the sense of space. The curtains and (Continued on page 88)

The banquette lining two of the walls provides as much accommodation as large settees. The two armchairs are built on a small scale. The upholstery of the banquette is in beige and brown with black and white in zebra-patterned cushions

• Concealed lighting gives the living-room an additional suggestion of spaciousness. In the photograph at the right is shown a huge shell on the mantelpiece within which a light is concealed. At one end of the banquette, a built-in cupboard also hides a very strong lamp with a reflector, which projects light through the frosted glass top and illuminates the vase of flowers placed there

NEW CREATIONS OF PARIS JEWELLERS

THE great Paris jewellers have felt the inspiration that brought about a renaissance in the mode, and their creations appear in new and marvellous and living forms. Designs have a rhythmic, fluid quality; precious stones blossom into flowers; and diamonds, rubies, sapphires, and emeralds are brought together in a harmony of colour and brilliance.

The wealth of all the ages seems assembled in these jewels, and, certainly, the jewellers have been inspired by the relics of ancient and romantic times—choosing, cutting, and combining stones with a lavishness that endows their creations with Oriental splendour or with the rich beauty of the Italian Renaissance. Yet, much as this new jewellery finds its inspiration in the past, it is thoroughly modern in its presentation and its appeal; and, gorgeous and extravagantly lovely as it is, there is a delicate restraint in the setting and design that saves it from any pompous or bombastic aspect.

Look at the Cartier bracelet, illustrated on this page—how marvellously the motifs run one into the other, in what might be an end- (Continued on page 84)

A flexible bracelet of baguette diamonds (shown across the top of the page) is restrained and rhythmical in its design, the motifs blending one into another

UNDER YOUR FROCK

MODERATELY PRICED LINGERIE

SEEN IN THE SHOPS

TO be called "lovely," only a year or two ago, meant shad-bones, slab sides, and a shingle. It meant a straight crêpe de Chine combination and—presto!—on went the dress.

To-day, the word "lovely" is tinged with elegance, a sophisticated word of black velvet Victorianism. It means delicate curves and a pretty waist and lots and lots of alluring dresses, each for a different occasion. It calls for quite different arrangements underneath than the little pink "teddy" that used to be so adequate. In fact, in this age of specialists, one must have particular lingerie for every occasion.

For instance, one may wear for sports the very new arrangement of combination and petticoat, or one may adhere to the school of thought that wears a slip, with step-ins or silk bloomers. For every-day wear, one may prefer a set of chemise and step-ins, choose step-ins and a slip, or remain true to a combination and slip. In the evening, one may wear only a pair of step-ins or, perhaps, enlarge this costume to include a brassière. In any case, the garments are specialized to suit a particular type of occasion.

To be in character with the new clothes, these must be exquisite, deceptively simple, and, for the most part, hand-made. Machine stitching, however, if carefully and delicately done, is appropriate for the simple, tailored models. In the necessity for specialized lingerie, one might find the item looming too large on one's financial horizon but for the fact that it is now possible to find really charming underclothes at small cost. These are simple, but bear the justly famous stamp of distinction that only hand-work can give, and many of the patterns are taken from the great French lingerie houses. It is interesting to note that, from now on, Saks-Fifth Avenue will have only hand-made lingerie in their inexpensive lingerie department, varying in price with the elaboration involved.

So far as lingerie trends go—though nothing is radically changed, after all—, tendencies are far more important than revolutions. And the tendencies are all towards the fitted line, towards less lace in inexpensive lingerie, and, when lace is used (and good lace is still very popular), towards a paler shade than the erstwhile deep écru Alençon and often to plain white Valenciennes and Binche, and towards greater variety of cottons and silks for sports.

In the matter of fit, all possible ingenuity has been exerted to combine the minimum of bulk with the maximum of grace. Panties are, without exception, made on yokes that fit the waist and hips without a wrinkle. Combina- (Continued on page 86)

COSTUMES

The sketches on these two pages illustrate the thirty-fourth in a series of articles on period costumes, which appear in Vogue from time to time and, when finished, will be collected and published in book form

Three costumes typical of 1843 and 1844 are shown on this page. The bodices are pointed at the tiny wasp-waist, and the full skirts completely obliterate the ankles and are so stiff and so wide as to prophesy the coming of crinolines

AS the eighteenth-century mode in England was aristocratic and picturesque, so the nineteenth was essentially bourgeois and practical. The stupendous industrial development of the nineteenth century created an immensely wealthy middle class, the members of which, to a constantly increasing extent, found their way into the social world. The great characteristic of the eighteen-forty mode—the first fully developed mode of the nineteenth century—and of the transition that led up to it was an entire lack of appreciation of the value of line. Possibly, it was a reaction from the revealing modes of the French Empire that led up to the wasp-waist and the absurd breadth of shoulders and skirt characteristic of the distorted figure of the 1840 woman.

The insipidity in every phase of feminine life could hardly fail to find expression in the mode. Vanity Fair, Pendennis, and the novels of Dickens are commentaries on the psychology, diversions, and occupations of the women of the day, and these illustrations show how their life was reflected in their clothes.

In 1840, skirts were amplified to make room for more ornamentation. Flounces, ruches, quillings, braidings, loops, and festoons of lace elaborate the skirt, and bow-knots or bouquets add further trimming, with lace petticoats beneath

Sleeves, too, were elaborate in the 1840 mode and were set a little below the top of the shoulder, defining the shoulder curve. The bodices often fastened in back, and, in front, jewelled brooches gathered and held soft folds of lace or tulle

In the early part of the nineteenth century, hats were large beribboned and befeathered affairs, and veils were thrown over the top, in a manner that reappeared about a decade or more ago. The parasols were often smaller than the hat

New refinements in quality

Inconspicuous convenience for travel

IN a space of no more than three small inches, Curads can be conveniently tucked into your traveling bag or bureau drawer. It is this unobtrusive compactness, together with a superior fineness of sanitary protection, that has made Curads so widely preferred, so ideal for use by the matron, the college girl, the business woman . . . by house guests . . . Now Curads have been still further refined in quality. The product of one of the leading manufacturers of surgical dressings, they are made of hospital-quality gauze and the finest of soft, white, fluffy cotton, to offer a superior protection and comfort. If your leading store does not carry them, send 40c to the Lewis Manufacturing Co., Division of the Kendall Company, Walpole, Massachusetts, for a full-size roll in a plain wrapper.

ON HER DRESSING-TABLE

MANY women find it most satisfactory in selecting their beauty preparations to concentrate upon one series, the virtues of which they have tested and which they can be sure of buying wherever they happen to be at the time that they need reinforcements. The Harriet Hubbard Ayer series is one that answers these requirements successfully, since it is an extensive and well-developed line, and the products can be purchased throughout this country and in many others.

AIDS TO BEAUTY

Among the new items recently added to this long list of interesting preparations is a muscle oil. This oil is intended as an aid in sustaining the facial muscles, thus helping to prevent the appearance of dread lines and wrinkles. It is to be applied where the facial muscles seem relaxed and where there is already a tendency towards wrinkles, and it does its best work when it is allowed to remain on overnight. Its light and pleasant fragrance is an exceptional virtue in an oil preparation. Another new product that is also primarily intended for the older, more relaxed type of skin is a special astringent with very active properties that contribute a bracing feeling to the face. The liquefying cream from this maker is to be especially recommended during hot weather, since it is extremely light in texture, dissolves immediately upon contact with the skin, and is lacking in any oily feeling. A brilliantine, which is also admirable in its lack of greasy or sticky quality, has been conveniently put up in pomade form, a guise that has obvious advantages for travelling. The newest lipstick in the Harriet Hubbard Ayer series is described as "semi-indelible" and is possessed of lasting colour qualities without being thick or heavy. Another item, one that proves of great aid to those with oily skin or complexions that are not as clear as might be desired, is a complexion brush. Women who have consulted dermatologists on the problems of skin of this type have frequently been advised to use an antiseptic soap solution in conjunction with a good complexion brush. This particular brush is made of sterilized white bristles that are sufficiently firm to create the necessary stimulation without roughening the texture of the skin.

Cotton is one of the most essential items of beauty equipment. We can't do without it, but we often have difficulty in doing with it, because the pieces torn hastily from a large roll never seem to be of the size or thickness desired. Now, an ideal form of beauty cotton has been provided by

Johnson and Johnson. It consists of individual flat pads, seventy-five in a box known as "couettes," which are the perfect size with which to wipe away or apply make-up or beauty preparations. These are made of sterilized cotton, and they are so packed that they may be kept in their own box, from which the single pads can easily be extracted, or they may be transferred to boxes to be left on the dressing-table. Also, they make a splendid addition to the travelling beauty kit. These can be purchased in drug and department shops all over the country.

Another convenient guise in which cotton is making its appearance is individual guest powder-puffs shaped like delicately coloured hollyhocks. These pastel puffs match the soft colours of the "Bubble" soap, and they are packed in the same smart silver boxes as the soap. A powder jar or tray heaped with these powder-puff blossoms is an attractive, as well as a convenient bit of equipment. They may be purchased at the Bath Shop in New York and in some shops in other cities.

SPECIALIZED PREPARATIONS

An inclusive series of beauty items has just been introduced under the name of Golden Peacock preparations. Aside from the regulation facial creams and lotions, this series includes various specialized items, such as a tonic tissue cream, which possesses astringent, as well as emollient properties. This is intended for use in stimulating at the same time that it softens the skin. A cucumber cream, which is in liquid form, is especially adapted for this time of year, since it helps to shield the skin against the sun or to relieve sun and wind burn after the elements have been allowed to bring damage to the skin. "Mazda" cream is successful in imparting a smooth whiteness to arms and shoulders. The jar for this cream contains a bit of sponge, which is moistened and used to apply the preparation. A damp cloth is then run over the skin, which is dried lightly, and powder is dusted over, leaving a pearly finish. Another special preparation is a hand-cream that is very effective in keeping the hands soft and white. The Golden Peacock preparations are all moderate in price and are available in any number of shops throughout the country.

Miss Elizabeth Altemus of Philadelphia

A BRILLIANT FAVORITE IN SOCIETY, SHE IS AN EXPERT HORSEWOMAN AND A DASHING GENTLEWOMAN JOCKEY

CLASSIC beauty, reflected in a modern mirror . . . a flawless profile, the perfect oval of a face that Phidias might have chiseled in an Athenian frieze . . . the silky chestnut hair is parted in the Grecian manner, the firm young skin is fine and lustrous as Attic marble.

Yet this classic beauty is a debonair young modern . . . a brilliant favorite in smart society . . . Miss Elizabeth Altemus, of an old family prominent in Philadelphia since before the Revolution.

Spirited as the thoroughbreds she rides so fearlessly, Miss Altemus is widely known as an expert horsewoman . . . a dashing gentlewoman jockey who rides the colors of her stables, purple and fuchsia, in many a hard-won race.

To live so actively in the open, yet to keep one's skin so radiantly smooth and fine, means taking pains! Like many other lovely society women, Miss Altemus has discovered the simplest, easiest, most satisfactory complexion care.

"I have found the perfect protection—Pond's," she says. "The Cold Cream cleanses perfectly. I never use any other. And the Cleansing Tissues are the softest things you can imagine, and take off the cream easily and completely.

"The Skin Freshener is well named!" adds Miss Altemus. "The Vanishing Cream makes a wonderful powder base, especially good for evening."

KEEP YOUR OWN SKIN lovely with these four steps of Pond's swift, simple, sure Method:

During the day—first, for thorough cleansing, generously apply Pond's Cold Cream over face and neck, several times and always after exposure. Pat in with upward, outward strokes, waiting to let the fine oils sink into the pores and float the dirt to the surface.

Second—wipe away all cream and dirt with Pond's Cleansing Tissues, silken-soft, absorbent.

Third—briskly dab your skin with Pond's Skin Freshener to banish oiliness, close and reduce pores, tone and firm, keep contours young.

Last—smooth on Pond's Vanishing Cream for powder base, protection, exquisite finish.

At bedtime—cleanse thoroughly with Cold Cream and wipe away with Tissues. If skin is dry, leave on a little fresh cream overnight.

going to Hostesses Inc. for suggestions for her own parties, and, when she told them her problem, they did not fail her. They told her where she could find a performing seal, for older children, or marionette show or a patient woman practised in the art of entertaining four-year-olds, for younger ones, as well as many other valuable bits of information. Then she went to the Party Factory at Saks-Fifth Avenue and discovered many more things. First, that ventriloquists, whose hideous dolls had filled her young dreams with nightmares, were dead as entertainment and performing dogs as passé as knees. She found out that if you were small in 1930, pinning the tail on the donkey was just one of the things you did not do, but, if any one gave you a paper airplane, you permitted them to blindfold you and pinned it to that portion of the map which, to your groping fingers, felt most like Paris.

Potato races are no more. Now, a clean and polished carrot is balanced on the shaking spoon and borne fearfully the length of the hall to be laid before a blasé paper rabbit. Renée found, too, that the Party Factory will supply the name of a caterer who specializes in small children's parties.

FOR THE PARTY GIVER

By making inquiries, Renée discovered various other facts. That many children at the wriggly age (and most ages under ten or twelve are wriggly) enjoy doing things more than seeing things. Children can be either little devils or little angels at parties, and, often, a party at which games are played under skilful direction is more of a success than one with the most expensive entertainment. And such old games as "Farmer in the Dell" or "Little Sally Waters," while they may have some modern improvements, are still the popular favourites. For, after all, no game is very old to a young person of four or five. Peanut hunts (while they wreck the portion of the house in which they are played) are still a source of joy, and spider-web parties or simplified treasure hunts are always a success. If the treasure hunt is planned for guests as old as nine or ten, each one is given a slip of paper on which a verse is typed, giving directions for searching for clue number two. This clue proves to be a second verse telling where to look for number three, and the chain continues through eight or ten clues, till the "treasure" is found. All of the last clues lead to the same spot, and here are hidden one rather large prize, wrapped in gold paper, for the one who finds it first, and smaller ones, in silver, for the rest of the searchers.

Nancy's party was to be given on her fifth birthday. As all the children were used to ponies, Renée decided to have a pony surprise party. She sent out twenty invitations and, when the guests arrived, seated them in rows of gilt chairs in the drawing-room. Every one was sitting quietly when a patter patter was heard in the hall and a knock on the door. Some one opened the door, and the star of the evening made his entrance. He was a tiny black pony with flowing mane and tail and felt-shod, diamond-studded hoofs. When Renée heard the gasps that greeted his appearance, she stopped worrying about the success of her party. For an hour, the pony and his master did tricks, and then, after his enthusiastic audience had patted him and shaken him by the hoof, he trotted out. The children were then presented with horses' hats, each named after some famous horse, and then they trotted at a measured pace to the dining-room, which was full of horses. Pink horses raced around the edge of the birthday cake, and a yellow pair guarded the Jack Horner Pie. When the guests left the table, each carried a box of candy with a prancing black pony with diamond hoofs on the lid.

WHAT TO EAT

Renée had had a hard time deciding on the food for this party. If the guests had been two or three years older, she could have carried her pony idea farther and had chicken timbales in pony forms, since there are delightful moulds for this purpose. But every one warned her that she should not depart too far from the daily régime to which the children were accustomed. Cereal, they said, and vanilla ice-cream were the safe choices. But Renée knew what the average four-year-old thinks of these choices, and, remembering the little girl who had eaten gravely and dutifully through her cereal and plain vanilla ice-cream and then inquired hopefully, "When is the party?" she determined to provide food as different from these as wisdom permitted.

Nancy had already attended one party at which her hostess had disguised the every-day cream of wheat with a discreet amount of maple syrup, and the dessert had been a frosted sponge-cake ring filled with vanilla ice-cream balls. At another party, fresh asparagus had been served, accompanied by thin sandwiches with simple fillings, the bread cut in the shapes of animals. This hostess had risked the disapproval of other parents by serving each guest with a very little creamed chicken, knowing that something different from the usual nursery menu would add greatly to the "party" feeling. The dessert, of course, was ice-cream, but the simple little cakes were gay with coloured icing. After still a third party, Nancy reported a birthday cake, gorgeous in size and decoration, which had been carefully baked so that any slice would hold a favour—an idea so totally lacking in the stimulating element of chance that it was a complete "flop" with the small guests, all of whom infinitely preferred the usual ring-coin-and-thimble variety, which so elates the lucky winners.

Destitute of any ideas, but still determined to provide something in the way of a surprise, Renée turned to Louis Sherry for advice and was provided with a menu that enchanted the small guests without conflicting with the ideas of guardian mothers and nurses. There were any number of small sandwiches cut in geometrical shapes, made of cream cheese and jelly on Boston brown bread, shredded lettuce on Graham bread, and chopped egg and watercress on wholewheat bread, accompanied by orangeade because the day was warm. Milk was provided also, and, if the weather had been cool, cocoa would have been substituted for the orangeade. The dessert was a triumph of ice-cream strawberries in little ice-cream baskets, accompanied by thin cookies with sugar frosting. The candy-box favours were filled with candied dates and apricots, in place of sweets less suitable for tender years.

The party was a huge success, and after Nancy, tired, happy, and not a little cross, had been carried up-stairs, Renée sat down among the debris to think how glad she was to have it over. She was disgusted to find herself planning a bigger and better one for next year and looking forward to it with enthusiasm.

TRUNKS

For distinguished public service

THE HEAD PORTER of one of the big hotels in Paris asked of an American, "What is the meaning of these red and yellow bands which some of your people are allowed to have on their luggage?"

He thought the familiar stripes of the Oshkosh "Chief" were some governmental insignia awarded for distinguished public service. As a matter of fact, that wouldn't be inappropriate!

HOW TO RECOGNIZE AN OSHKOSH "CHIEF"

"Chief" Oshkosh Cord Duck, the strongest and toughest trunk covering made, is found only on Oshkosh "Chief" Trunks. It is recognizable anywhere by the two bands of red and yellow stripes woven into the fabric.

Oshkosh Trunks can also be had in the less expensive fibre covering. The Oshkosh trade-mark identifies them.

An attractive descriptive booklet, "The Chief of Trunks," will be sent you on request to 471 High Street, Oshkosh, Wisconsin.

PARIS JEWELLERY

less and never tiring succession. The necklace, while Egyptian in its inspiration, is indubitably of our time. The slender bracelet at the bottom of page 65 reminds one of the little gold link bracelets that we wore in our childhood, though the links and the perfectly matched stones strung along the middle are diamonds.

Mauboussin cuts precious stones into the shape of flowers, leaves, and fruit and assembles them with the naturalness of growing things. There is a romantic, imaginative quality in what he does. He has a great interest in rubies, at the moment, and some of the jewellery shown on page 67 was taken from the Ruby Exhibition that he opened at his Paris shop in June.

Van Cleef and Arpels, too, have a

Cartier designed these lovely pendant earrings of baguette diamonds with very large solitaire diamond drops great feeling for rubies, and in a pendant necklace, shown on page 66, alternate them with diamonds, the warm glow of the red stone irradiating the cool glitter of the white.

The Russian influence, in this necklace and in the brooch, is very strong.

Van Cleef and Arpels and Boucheron each carve emeralds into the shape of balls, and Boucheron strings them in a triple strand—to break the line of a flat, fitted diamond necklace and lie in a lovely curve at the base of the throat. Diamonds and pearls, too, we shall see thus combined.

Necklaces become shorter, encircling the neck or the line of the décolletage; bracelets show a tendency to become more slender; and brooches spread into new, romantic shapes.

right handkerchief, belt, scarf, and blouse to go with it. There are many, many varieties of colours and fabrics, and it is very simple and easy to assemble them all in one department.

If you've bought a dress or a suit on the fifth floor at Saks-Fifth Avenue, you can walk a few steps to an accessory counter and find all the accessories to complete the costume—gloves, bags, scarfs, handkerchiefs, blouses, and even perfumes. This is certainly a time-saving idea.

According to statistics taken lately throughout the country, ninety per cent. of the women are under five-feet-five. This means that a good many women are tiny and have difficulty not only in being fitted, but also in being suited as to type. Franklin Simon has organized a new department in their store, the Small Women's Shop, where the short woman who is no longer a Junior Miss doesn't have to struggle with the larger sized dresses of the Women's Department. Copies of French models and domestic models are offered in great variety.

Evening Details: The chic of bright coloured slippers has been revived, and the smartest way to tie them up to your costume is to match them to the flowers you wear. For instance, with a white gown, you might wear bright red slippers and bright red flowers at your waist or shoulder. Of course, it would be most chic to wear real red carnations, but, if these are not at hand, you will find in the shops an assortment of artificial flowers. Red, green, blue, and yellow are good complementary colours. And remember that, in artificial flowers, it is smartest to have them without the green leaves.

Lord and Taylor has taken an excellent suggestion from the French dressmakers, who have shown so many beautiful evening dresses with smart separate scarfs in a contrasting colour—which, by the way, would be another thing to match to your slippers. Augustabernard shows a pale pink satin dress with a dark green chiffon scarf of the most beautiful cut. Lord and Taylor has this scarf in a variety of colours in the scarf department. There are any number of colour varieties that you can think up for yourself, thereby making your slightly passé evening frock into a fresh one.

Beauty: Beauty in its most sophisticated form is being sponsored by Saks-Fifth Avenue. In Antoine's department, where everything can be done to your hair and finger-nails, the final touch of toe-nail culture has been added. This is a most necessary addition to the smart woman's appearance on the beach, what with barefoot bathing and open beach sandals. The feet are well cared for and massaged and the nails beautifully manicured while all you have to do is to relax in deep green leather chairs.

It is well known that Best has always been a great friend of the younger generation. In a charming beauty parlour, gay with wall-paper and fresh green paint, is a hair-cutting salon devoted entirely to children. They are given the same attention that the grown-ups receive, and their little coiffures are started on the right road to chic. For older girls, there are such things as manicures and permanent waves. The little girl who wept for curls may grow into them as she gets older.

THERE IS AN OLD VERSE, NOW OUT OF PRINT, WHICH RUNS ..

If I should go to Heav'n and find
In all the wide dominion of the air
No trace of thee among the natives there,
I would not bide therein
But I would sin and sin
And seek thee elsewhere.

Love is the secret of the universe. It is like a hidden spring underneath one's life, ever supplying freshness and sparkle to the art of living • Life lies in love, laughter and work • But laughter dies when you look deep into life. Work, without love, is futile and bleak, the winds of emptiness blow across the heart. Love alone justifies life. Love alone completes it • To love is to light a lamp within, which not only warms and comforts you, yourself, but sends out from you a glow which cheers and comforts others • It is better to cast your pearls of love before anyone, anything, than to keep them. You are thoroughly natural, thoroughly alive only when you are filled with love. It opens the doors of your understanding. It is only when one has been burned clean with the fire of love, that knowledge comes • Love alone can make that which is heavy light, can bear evenly that which is uneven • When you walk, the stars are beneath your feet. When you are cold with the fear of life, love wraps you like a cloak. Love is the torch from which all great deeds have been lighted. It is the candlelight beside which dwells content. With love, nothing in life is beyond bearing. In love alone are all the heights and depths of joy and dreams and friendship.

L'Amour d'Elizabeth, the perfume of enchantment, sings in fragrance that love which poets sing in words, weaving its magic spell.

Brassières are cut longer below the bust, to prevent a ridge or any other landmark to show where the brassière ends and the step-in begins. THE NEW SLIPS

Art and ingenuity have gone into the new slips. Not only are they cleverly close at the waist, but, if they are of the straight-line type, they are fitted under the arm to prevent the unsightly sag that used to wreak such havoc to the hems of slips. These hems are deeper to prevent the silhouette that is so unsmart, however charming, and the slips are made longer so that they complement the new dresses. Even the most divinely tall daughter of the gods could find a slip long enough at Altman's, which specializes in the extra-long slip. Saks-Fifth Avenue has a wrap-around slip that is a marvel of fit and a joy of convenience and, also, a most ingenious affair with a top, of lace, that hooks like a brassière and again illustrates the possibilities of combination in undergarments. Both of these are shown on page 68.

A little sister to the slip is the new—or old—petticoat, whose face we had almost forgotten. Like a prodigal daughter it returns to us, and we are overjoyed to find that it is indispensable to wear over the tucked-in blouse and under the overskirt, so that the tucked-in blouse doesn't show under the skirt. Best shows one of these long-lost relatives in pink crêpe and Alençon lace, which appears on page 69. Lord and Taylor shows a white silk broadcloth one for sports, and this is illustrated on page 68.

SPORTS LINGERIE

In sports lingerie, both cut and material are mannish in type and treatment. Each article must be comfortable, free and unbinding, and easy to launder. Cotton, of course, is outstanding by virtue of its coolness and absorbent qualities, and silk broadcloth, soft shantung-like raw silk, cotton mesh, and linen mesh are also excellent. A splendid type of cotton mesh shirt is to be found at Lord and Taylor, to complete a set of white silk broadcloth panties and petticoat, both fitted on yokes. These appear at the top of the sports column on page 68. Altman also has a set of pants, slip, and chemise of a soft pink Chinese shantung, beautifully hemstitched and fitted, and these are illustrated in the middle column on the same page. For riding, the linen mesh combinations of brassière and closed step-ins at Bonwit Teller, also shown on page 68, are indispensable. This shop also has shirts and separate pants of this same linen mesh. Best's short girdle of net and porous elastic, illustrated beside the combination, is a real necessity.

For sports, most women prefer girdles to the all-in-one corselets. These girdles are found in fabrics or elastic or both and are boneless or only slightly boned and, above all, untrimmed and, therefore, washable. Linen, net, and strong silk batiste in combination with surgical elastic are the best fabrics for sports corselets. Often, a slight boning is used at the top in front to prevent rolling. Such corselets as are worn are of much the same fabrics and are also boneless and untrimmed. Although fitted at the waist, they are in no place so tight as to hinder freedom of action. The one illustrated on page 68, from Altman, has a cleverly cut hip-line to give a snug fit and at the same time allow for freedom of action. Franklin Simon has an "all-in-one" for sports that is excellent, made of net and elastic, with elastic shoulder-straps that can not slip.

FOR DAYTIME WEAR

For ordinary every-day city wear, as on the street, one may find quantities of really good hand-made lingerie at small cost. Hand-sewed pipings and simple embroidery, such as hemstitching and monogramming, are very smart. As always, flowered ninon is pretty and practical, bound in plain colour, and it will launder perfectly. Examples from Franklin Simon are illustrated on page 68. Pleats are still extremely chic and no doubt always will be. But for those who count the cost, Vogue suggests the type of lingerie that does not need pleating. The money saved on French laundry bills can be put into the quality of material and hand-work on the unpleated varieties of underwear.

As for corsets, the best daytime materials for summer are crêpe de Chine, net, silk batiste, linen, poplin, and silk broadcloth in combination with surgical elastic. Satin seems hot for warm weather. These may have the added elaboration of a little lace, but are still quite simple. The girdles fit well at the waist and are higher in front than in back, to give a straight line to the diaphragm. Corselets are enormously popular to-day and nearly always are cut with the low evening back, regardless of the purpose for which they are intended, and have elastic shoulder-straps. Incidentally, it might be well to say in passing that a corselet must be carefully fitted, or it will do more harm than good. It must be picked out with more deliberation than a simple girdle.

For evening girdles and corselets, much the same fabrics are applicable as in the daytime, with the addition of all lace. The elaboration is, of course, more marked. In these, as in all corsets of to-day, the tendency is towards shapeliness through fitting and not boning. The models illustrated on page 69, from Franklin Simon, are excellent examples of the girdle for the slim figure and the all-in-one for the heavier figure.

FUNDAMENTAL CHIC

Brassières, both for day and evening, should be low in back, light, and of the uplift variety. Trimming may be used, so long as it does not interfere with a smooth line under a dress. Net is the outstanding material for brassières. Many women have trouble in finding models sufficiently low in back, and the best solution to this seems to be in the type of bandeau that crosses behind and fastens in front.

In evening lingerie, it is a case of the least amount of clothes being the smartest. Most women wear simply a corset of some sort and a pair of panties, or these and a brassière. One may let one's imagination wander at will among the Elysian fields of elaboration, so long as the result is sufficiently simple to be chic and, above all, does not produce any effect of bunchiness under the evening dress.

A BACHELOR'S FLAT IN PARIS

carpets exactly matched the beige of the walls, the one exception being the curtains in the bedroom. To give a still greater feeling of space, the doors were taken out, with the exception of the bedroom door, and the doorways hung with curtains of the same material as the windows, with the result that one has a vista of the living-room, the corridor, and the dining-room on entering, and the flat does not seem to be as small as it really is.

The most important problem, and the one that received the first consideration, was the living-room. A room that measures eleven by fourteen feet, has a window along one entire wall, opening upon a terrace, and a double doorway on one side with a fireplace next to it in the corner does not offer much wall-space as a background for furniture. Nor does a room of this size allow one to use many pieces of furniture and still leave enough clear floor space to walk about in. Therefore, it was decided to decorate it more or less like a yacht. The photographs on page 63 show how this was done. A banquette along two sides of the walls was chosen as the only possible solution of providing comfortable seats for a number of people. This banquette will seat at least six comfortably. It is made like a bed, with box-springs and a mattress, but is not so wide as the ordinary single bed and, therefore, more comfortable than a divan sofa.

In the corner, by the window, there was an awkward jut in the wall, which made it impossible to finish the banquette neatly. Therefore, a built-in piece of furniture was employed to square off this corner. It has a door, like a cupboard door, and inside is concealed a very strong lamp with a reflector, which projects light through the frosted glass top and illuminates the vase of flowers or foliage that is always arranged there. The other end of the banquette, near the door, is piled with cushions to be used as comfort dictates. Between the end of this banquette and the doorway is a small round table, which is covered by a circular brown satin cover that falls to the floor and conceals the fact that it is only a humble deal table, costing about sixty-five francs.

FURTHER SPACE CONSERVATION

Everything in this room is in beige or brown. The walls and ceiling are beige, and also the curtains at the window and door. The Moroccan rug is in white and tête de nègre. The modern stuffs covering the chairs, the banquette, and the cushions are all in tones of beige and brown with the exception of two cushions of zebra design in black and white. The table in the angle of the banquette is of modern lacquer in dark brown and was built especially for this corner. It has two disappearing leaves that pull out so that the people sitting on the banquette have a convenient place to put their coffee-cups and cocktail glasses. The space underneath the table holds a gramophone and records. The two armchairs were built on a very small scale to increase the feeling of height and space in the room. This idea of space was never forgotten for a moment, and every other idea was subservient to it.

This room has also a light in the corner above the banquette, made of nickel petals that shield several strong electric bulbs, a white porcelain lamp with a white shade on the round table next to the banquette by the door, and a light inside the shell on the mantel.

The entrance-hall is empty, except for a deal table over which has been thrown a zebra skin, falling onto a dark brown Afghan rug. It is lighted by a modern lighting fixture made of three nickel disks concealing the light.

What is now the dining-room was intended, in the plan of the flat, as a second bedroom. It is only nine feet by ten and much too tiny for even the smallest round table that would seat six. Therefore, the idea was adopted of using the table with a banquette, like a table in a restaurant, which allows three people to sit against the wall and the remaining three on chairs. This arrangement made it possible for a servant to move about and also gave space for a screen to hide the tiny cabinet de toilette with its wash-stand, now glorified by the term of "butler's pantry." From here, a tiny window was cut into the kitchen to pass dishes, and, by a judicious arrangement of shelves, it is possible to store the glassware and other necessities of a pantry in this tiny cubby-hole. Behind the beige screen, every inch of space has been utilized, and here, more than anywhere else, does the installation resemble a yacht. As in the rest of the flat, this room is in beige.

A SHIPSHAPE DINING-ROOM

The banquette is covered in zebra-patterned material like that used on the two cushions in the living-room, the folding bridge chairs are lacquered dark brown with natural wood seats. The table also is done in dark brown lacquer with a modern design in beige, grey, cream, and white. The glassware is amber, the table service buffet, and there is a large shell that serves as a bowl for flowers.

The very narrow corridor, running from the entrance-hall past the dining-room to the bedroom, is like the passageway on a yacht and was very difficult to deal with. Narrow strips of mirror are fastened to the wall, at the level of one's head. There is a strapontin by the telephone, which rests on a bracket on the wall—there being no space for a table and a chair. The floor is strewn with small zebra skins to relieve the monotony of beige walls and carpet.

The bedroom, measuring ten by twelve feet, was difficult to work out so that cupboard space could be had. Eventually, the niche for the bed was devised in connection with the cupboards that had to be provided, of which there are two on each side, with a general storage space overhead. On the opposite wall, there is a piece of built-in furniture that serves as a desk and a chest of drawers and also conceals the radiator. On the wall opposite the window is a combination pier-glass and dressing-table, shelves below the glass at different heights accommodating toilet articles.

The cotton printed material used in the bedroom is about seventy-five francs a yard, but it is very wide. The fur rug at the foot of the bed cost eighty-five francs. But the material in the dining- and living-rooms was, in proportion to the rest of the things, rather expensive—as much as two hundred and fifty francs a yard—because the use of good material here saved the extreme simplicity of the scheme of decoration from appearing too cheap in quality. Also, for this reason, the painting was very well done and the upholsterer's work of the first quality. Yet, actually, every item and cost in the entire flat came out of the sum of forty-five thousand francs.

In dieting for the fashionable figure, be sure your diet is well balanced with a regular supply of roughage

Beauty that is envied everywhere

LORETTA YOUNG
First National Pictures, Inc.

STRIKINGLY smart sports costumes, trailing evening gowns so alluringly feminine—such fashions as these were made for beautiful women. For women who possess that much-to-be-desired "rounded slimness" of youth.

Today, graceful curves and the radiant glow of health are necessary to look well in the new modes. They are the first essentials.

And most women can achieve this fashionable figure by wise dieting. . . .

But avoid strenuous, starvation menus. They often destroy beauty. No doubt you know girls who complain of dizziness while dieting. Of headaches, of listlessness. Often they lose their color, the complexion becomes sallow and tiny lines of age appear.

The reason for this is that most reducing diets lack roughage. Without roughage, the symptoms and evils of improper elimination are inevitable.

Yet they are easy to avoid. Just add two tablespoonfuls of Kellogg's ALL-BRAN to the diet daily. It is not fattening—yet it is guaranteed to relieve and to prevent all danger of improper elimination.

In addition, Kellogg's ALL-BRAN helps prevent dietary anemia. It contains iron. This mineral restores color to the complexion, bringing the glow of radiant health. Eaten with fruit juices or milk, important vitamins are furnished to balance the diet.

You will like the many ways Kellogg's ALL-BRAN can be eaten without adding many calories to the menu. In clear soups, in fruit juices, on salads. Improved in taste and texture. Use it in cooking.

Isn't this better than taking pills and drugs that only bring temporary relief—and are often harmful? Keep healthy by making Kellogg's ALL-BRAN a part of your diet every day. It is recommended by dietitians. Ask for it in the red-and-green package—made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

The proof of MACGREGOR "set-harmonization" is simple though the mathematical relationship which makes this easy proof possible is very involved . . .

Supporting the putter at each end in some such way as illustrated, you can take the other seven clubs in a set of MACGREGOR Harmonized Irons, one by one in order of length, and by the exercise of some patience cause each and all to come to rest across the putter shaft in a horizontal position. The grip ends of the shafts and the heels of the irons then form two straight lines. This is proof positive that with the lengths and weights regularly graded from club to club there is no change in their effective or swinging weight, from the driving iron to the niblick. The balance points all lying on the straight line of the putter shaft, represent absolute uniformity.

The mathematical formulae, the careful weighing on delicate scales, the exacting tests and checking of various factors with mechanical devices and instruments of the greatest precision—all the means by which we assure this result—need not concern you. This simple test proves that MACGREGOR Harmonized Irons are supremely matched to become a unit in your hands for the accomplishment of more satisfactory play.

MACGREGOR has not only created Harmonization for iron clubs, but for the woods as well, and has related woods and irons to each other in Complete Harmonized Sets—the ultimate in matched units. See your Pro or dealer. Catalog by mail on request.

stone. An ivory marble staircase passes two arched recesses where the Brancovan and Bibesco panoplies hang, and a mosaic of mirrors in another little recess, above one's head, reflects the still brilliant flags jutting out from the balustrade opposite. With Blenheim, Mogosoëa is the only house in Europe to bear its own indoor flags.

Reaching the second and principal floor, I did not know where to look—at the floors, the walls, or the scene before me. The plain stucco walls rear themselves to white, vaulted ceilings. The floors are of dark green or ivory marble from Greece and Italy, rose and ochre from Roumania, or tiny gold mosaics from Venice. Standing on the golden floors of this vestibule, one walks by two arched lounges, with stoutly columned arches that seem to kneel like children under the tall vaults. Straight before one, between the lounges, a vast window reveals the loggia, overlooking the terraces, the lake, and the trees of a little island.

"I told Marthe I would take you directly to her," George said. We walked through a marble corridor to the lake front of the house and stopped before a door of unusual workmanship, for the substance is light in texture and woven like a basket. The Princesse was sitting up in bed and writing. The room is not large, but very beautiful, and an exquisite vaulted ceiling, rather like an open umbrella, rises high above her tall, honey coloured, canopied Venetian bed. On a high green chair, before a great pale green Venetian screen, sits a Spanish doll, dressed in a grown-up Spanish baby gown. There was a fire burning on the platform of the high fireplace, flickering on two dark chests glowing with painted, but saintly panels.

HOSPITALITY AT MOGOSOËA

"You had better have a sleep," the Princesse said. "If you want anything, ring or scream."

"The French Minister and his wife are coming to lunch," I was told. "Queen Sophie of Greece and one of her daughters are coming to tea. There will be people to dinner. To-morrow you are going to Poland, and the next day to Czechoslovakia." My sense of humour numbed by my journey, I started to worry about more visas, until I learned that, when Marthe speaks of going to Poland or Germany, she is referring to the Legations in Bucharest.

I went back through the lounges, with their silver divans and bright flowers in dark bowls and light flowers in sombre vases. In a white landing overlooking the terrace, before a low, painted door, the green parrot screamed at me. The parrot stands at the head of a tiny open marble staircase, curving from white to a faint pink, which leads down to the ground floor where a great grilled door opens upon the terrace. To the right are guest-rooms and their baths. I went into the room I was to occupy, and the first thing I saw, being an American, was a telephone beside the bed. The walls were hung in white, green, and mulberry-toned Chinese embroideries, and shallow Chinese bowls were filled with fresh rose-leaves. There were books that shattered every tradition of the usual guest-room, and, when I fell into a rose marble bathtub, I had no desire to ring or scream for anything.

Later, looking out on the terrace that ends in a long, abrupt step at the lake, I saw a motor-boat with house guests out after ducks. I decided the guests must be English. On the loggia, my hostess, in a sports dress from Chanel, was serving cocktails, which she never takes herself. Lunch was served in the dining-room, the furniture of which came from the Château de Menars, near Orléans, which belonged to George Bibesco's mother, the Princesse de Chimay.

After the guests left, I went for a walk with Marthe to see the English gardener, his orchids, violets, grapes, and gardenias. Then across the orchards to see his deadly rival, the Roumanian gardener, his cyclamen plants ready for market and cabbages fit for kings. Swarthy peasants dig about the black earth with their bare feet, and a young employee brought up on the Princesse's own estate twenty kilometres away, proud of his recent military service, clicks his heels.

A SECRET GARDEN

Then Marthe took me to see her secret garden, a little walled garden filled with bright light blue flowers and dark little cypress-trees, like a Persian print. This garden is hidden beside a low, colonnaded building, long ago the kitchen of the estate and soon to be turned into a great studio. Close by is the chapel of pure Roumanian architecture, and tucked away beneath the great trees of the park is the tomb of the Bibescos.

Mogosoëa has seen periods of splendour and decay and, until a few years ago, was inhabited by rooks and owls, while trees had grown in the crypt. We had come back from our walk when the Princesse told me its history.

Among other things, she told me that Prince Constantin Brancovan, the Valachian Prince who built Mogosoëa, was a contemporary of Louis XIV. and was called "Lord and Master of the Roumanian Countries." His capital was Bucharest, and Mogosoëa was his Versailles. The Prince was a powerful ally of Venice and called Venetian architects to construct the palace.

After the War, the Princesse Bibesco plunged into the restoration of Mogosoëa, as an escape from reality. Like her ancestor, Brancovan, she called a Venetian architect, Domenico Ruspolo, to her aid. During the period of each year when she was not in Paris, Ruspolo came to work in company with George Bibesco's young nephew, Prince George Cantacuzène, who had just received his diploma from the Beaux Arts in Paris. Mogosoëa was to be not only a resurrection of the past, but a model of modernity, if only for its positively American heat and hot-water system and some magic hidden in dynamos, which, at a single turn of a switch at the first hint of dusk, illuminates the entire palace.

And now it's time for tea. On this first day of my visit, Queen Sophie of Greece and her youngest daughter, the Princesse Catherine, were the guests. We had tea in the library, which is Empire. Napoleon stared down at us from the wall, while Queen Sophie spoke of her grandson, the Crown Prince Michael (then the King) as "poor little man," and I wondered how the Kaiser happened to have a sister so utterly charming.

That evening, we were just a few people at dinner, and a Tzigane orchestra came out from Bucharest to play for us. Some of their songs must have been very naughty, for Marthe, wearing the emerald earrings Robert de Montesquieu wrote about, looked annoyed and said she was glad I didn't understand. Enjoy this marvelous Beauty Bath—and instantly have a skin as soft as velvet!

MERELY dissolve half a package or more of Linit in your bath, bathe in the usual way, using your favorite soap—and then feel your skin! It will be soft and smooth as a rose petal.

After the soothing Linit Beauty Bath, powdering is unnecessary, because Linit leaves just the right amount of powder on the skin, evenly spread and without excess. You will find that Linit eliminates "shine" from the neck and arms, harmlessly absorbs perspiration without clogging the pores and does away with the inevitable damp or semi-dry feeling of the skin that usually follows an ordinary bath.

Starch from corn is the main ingredient of Linit. Being a pure vegetable product, it contains none of the mineral properties found in many cosmetics today. Doctors and dermatologists who realize the purity and soothing qualities of starch from corn generally recommend it for the tender and super-sensitive skin of young babies.

After dinner, we danced in the ballroom, which is in the process of being decorated. One immense chaste wall, pierced only by a small door leading to the library, is covered with cartoons for a tapestry that is to be translated from the frescoes in the chapel. The large centre panel shows Prince Brancovan and his four sons and his wife with their seven daughters. The Prince, Princesse, and their eldest son quaintly hold models of the Church in their hands, while each of the younger children holds a rose. And, in this decoration, the Princesse wears the earrings that Marthe wore at dinner.

The following evening, we went into Bucharest to the Polish Legation. In the car, Marthe said, "This party is being given by the Comte and Comtesse de Chambek for the Polish Foreign Minister, the Comte Zalesky. You must thank the Comtesse de Chambek for having invited you." I do not remember having thanked anybody, but, if I did, I am sure it was the wrong person. The men bristled like porcupines with decorations.

On the way home, Marthe took off her diadem of emeralds and diamonds, which she hates to wear, as it is too heavy for her, just like the diadem of Catherine-Paris. On the road were great wide hay carts drawn by little rough horses. We had to stop to let a train crawl by. The gates remained down while another train made up its mind what to do, so George became impatient and called out from the car. "Put those gates up," said George. The soldiers saluted and went to speak to a switchman. The gates went up. This country is lots of fun.

HISTORY IN A GUEST BOOK

In this far-off part of the world, Mogosoëa is a world in itself, for every one comes to it. The house book is history. Beneath his signature, an Austrian Ambassador in all friendliness sketched an Austrian standing upon a Russian's stomach and gently stabbing him with a pitchfork. Now, both Empires are dead. A great dashing "Marie" is scattered all over the book; a more controlled "Ferdinand."

The Princesse rarely goes into town. She does not have to. After lunch and her inspection of the estate, I have gone canoeing with her, weaving through hundreds of water-lilies. Sometimes, we go to call on the swans at the far end of the lake or disembark to see the farm crops. After tea in the library, she writes or dictates her correspondence. Some afternoons, she joins a shooting party, and I have seen Catherine-Paris before my eyes. A green-costumed Roumanian or German keeper stands by holding her gun, which she really never uses. In the still air, the beaters are heard, and they emerge, dozens of them, very wild and shaggy looking, while, a few yards away, sleek American cars are waiting to take the party back to tea.

One evening, after a big shoot, we were alone at dinner, and George made us go down-stairs to see the really beautiful mirror mosaics he is making for the house.

The following afternoon, we drove into Bucharest to have tea with the Princesse Hélène, the mother of little Crown Prince Michael, so recently a king. She is very charming and good-looking and lives in a pretty house filled with flowers and portraits of her truly wonderful-looking family. After tea, like all good little boys, the little Crown Prince came in. "Pull up your socks, mister, they're falling down," said his aunt, the Princesse Irène of Greece. He is a darling child, very blond and plump and shy, with a tremendous dimple in his cheek. It seemed to be like every other household in the world.

Back at Mogosoëa, there is always something new, something old, something beautiful and interesting. There are photographs about: "To Marthe . . . Alfonso," "To Marthe . . . Ferdinand." Photographs to the Princesse from Briand, from Herbert Asquith, Marshal Lyautey. There are precious books with long hand-written dedications from Anatole France, Paul Valéry, Marcel Proust. One never knows whom one is going to meet in this luminous palace, so vast, but so intimate. One evening, the German Ambassador and his wife dined. The next day, the French First Secretary came to lunch. That evening, boys from the Polish and Italian legations.

A DAY IN BUCHAREST

However, one morning we drove into town to the flower-show, to see how the flowers from Mogosoëa looked and to say "How do you do" to the Queen. We walked about with the Queen and with the Regent, and the Queen is going to buy Marthe's orchids and grapes, because it seems that, in all Roumania, it never occurs to anybody else to raise orchids and grapes. I stayed in to lunch with the young Cantacuzènes and was shown numberless churches, one built by Brancovan and now surrounded by a hospital supported by the Bibescos. One charming little church was built by Marthe's ancestors, the Maurocordatos, when their daughter married Bibesco. Then George Cantacuzène showed me the bank for which he was the architect. This bank is a great puzzle to Roumanians, as they can not understand why a bank should be beautiful. Then I saw the Jockey Club that he built and the adorable pink house where King George and Queen Elizabeth of Greece live. Returning to Mogosoëa, I found Madame Mironesco, the wife of the Foreign Minister, having tea, and, in time for the dinner that was to inaugurate his visit, Alfred Savoir, who is going to work on a play with the Princesse.

To-morrow evening, the Princess Hélène, mother of Crown Prince Michael, her brother, King George of Greece, and her sister, the Princesse Irène, are coming to dinner. Mogosoëa has one more tradition, a tradition that is the breaking of one: when the Royalties go out to dine, this is the only house in Roumania where they go without their suite, without one dame d'honneur or one aide de camp.

Marthe Bibesco is the most astounding woman I have ever known. Very beautiful, young, smart, caring for her house so fastidiously, I can never think of her as a writer. And yet, an English critic recently wrote of her: "I lately wrote that the Princesse Marthe Bibesco is one of the greatest woman writers in France." And she is a Roumanian. Of an amazing intelligence, she has a charming way of knowing so much.

She has a pagan love for flowers that is a religion. One evening, she had a mulberry-tree brought into the house, a great, extravagant, unimaginable tree, with white, fragrant flowers that showered like a sky-rocket forever fixed in the sky. "Let us pray to the tree," she said to me.

Mogosoëa is a fairy palace, and she is a story-book princess.

WHAT THEY READ

By DAVID CORT

DURING the War, the English novelist, Compton Mackenzie held the post of second-in-command of espionage and counter-espionage in Gallipoli. The older members of the English writing profession seem almost en masse to have taken that solution of what to do in war-time, and now, in peace-time, they are using the valuable material they picked up in the Secret Service.

Now comes Mr. Mackenzie's "GALLIPOLI MEMORIES" (Doubleday, Doran and Company). The author explains in a preface that this is only the first of four books dealing with whatever he remembers of his experiences in Gallipoli, Greece, and the Aegean Sea. He says that this first volume adds nothing of any historical value to the literature of the War, but he hopes in the succeeding instalments to illuminate the situation in Greece during 1916 and 1917, which, "obscure enough in any case, has been still further obscured by a mass of partisan writing on both sides." He finishes with the request that he be excused for "not displaying as much moral indignation as the mood of the moment expects from a writer about the War."

All this sounds very reasonable, and one accepts it with the admission that it is very modest and ingratiating of the author to deprecate his work so. But Mr. Mackenzie's "recapturing of the spirit" of his military experience is so casual and monumental an unearthing of trivialia that the reader faints under it. To Mr. Mackenzie himself, this book must certainly be of the profoundest interest; to the politer members of his immediate family, it might too. Even to Englishmen in general, who are indefatigably interested in Englishmen and in politics and in controversy and in officers and gentlemen, it might yield some booty. But I must say that I read hundreds of pages of this stuff without one flicker. Consider the chapter titles: "The Beginning of the War," taking up the themes of how much the author wanted to get into it, why nobody would let him play, what books he was writing to cheer up the home folks and the brave boys, letters written here and there, the answers, and enough documentary evidence to prove who started the War, much less merely how an English novelist named Mackenzie got into it. Next: "Off to Alexandria": he has neuritis, grows a moustache, and the Lusitania is sunk. "Getting a Uniform": there's a thrill, write it yourself. It must be said here, however, that the chapter includes the author's apology when he writes that for ten years he has been trying to achieve the detachment necessary, theoretically, to write about Gallipoli and admits, "I have come to the conclusion that I never shall achieve such detachment, and that I must be content with the less ambitious task of recapturing the emotions and excitements and embarrassments of one insignificant individual against the background of that heroic tragedy."

"Insignificant Embarrassments of a Hero" might even be the right title for the book. Next chapter: "Looking for G.H.Q.", in which the Boy Scouts in Egypt look for G.H.Q. "The Arcadian": this is a boat, but we have time also to hear plenty about "dear delightful George Lloyd," later Lord Lloyd of Dolobran, G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., late High Commissioner for Egypt and the Sudan, an empire-builder in the rough. And so the chapters go: "Life at G.H.Q.": yes, they found it. "More Life at G.H.Q." A battle seen from a great distance is inserted at about this point. "Tenedos for the Second Time." "Tenedos for the Third Time." "Days and Nights in Lesbos." And at last, on page two hundred and eighty-eight, we get a theme: "The Vassilaki Family," a collection of harmless sobs who hereafter constitute the chief justification for the military existence of the English novelist named Mackenzie. There is a rumour that they are spies, and the whole army piles onto the necks of the Vassilaki family.

I didn't read far enough to find out what eventually happened to them, but it was pale fun while it lasted. The feeble efforts of Mackenzie to act as though he had to deal with scoundrels like the Vassilakis every day of the week are the best part of it all. I have just given the high lights of Mr. Mackenzie's War experiences up to page three hundred of Volume I., but it's the detail that matters. In England, the publishers say, this book sold over twenty thousand copies. At least we can say for the U. S. that a book like this written by an American wouldn't sell over twenty copies, and we shall be definitely chagrined if the American edition of this one does much better than twenty. It is an insult to the uses people can make of their time to allow them to read such feeble insignificances of gentlemen keeping alive and hewing careers out of the profession of arms. The chapter heading of the last chapter is the perfect criticism of the whole book, with exclamation-point: "Hellas."

Fermo-Derm . . . the Six-Fold Beauty Mask

1. It clears the pores
2. It braces the tissues
3. It moulds the contour
4. It removes fatigue
5. It corrects blemishes
6. It beautifies the skin

For years, Lola Casnati's personal clients have been marvelously benefitted by her exclusive formulae for a beautiful skin. Now, in FERMO-DERM—available for the first time to women everywhere—Casnati combines many of the precious ingredients with which she has achieved outstanding success.

FERMO-DERM comes in semi-plastic form. Rich in rare ingredients, this creamy, fragrant preparation, so soft and warm when applied, is a revelation. FERMO-DERM contains a benign solvent which gently dissolves pore obstructions and old, dead cuticle, with its discolorations, leaving the tissues firm—the skin smooth, glowingly transparent.

In creating FERMO-DERM, Lola Casnati, skin analyst, has achieved a life's ambition to give to woman a formulae which would maintain her beauty and render youthful appearance long-lived. FERMO-DERM exceeds in scientific effectiveness, her fondest hopes for it.

Atlantic City beach brigade and a childhood mare named "Brownie" who pulled the lawn-mower, time is the only thing there is. The problem, therefore, is how best to kill it. I had to give up the idea of taking along my tapestry work. Some horse might see me and feel badly all the rest of the day. I have thought, too, of concealing a list of German irregular verbs in the program and studying them at odd moments. But I can't study German irregular verbs without making my mouth go. As the moments grow longer and the chair harder and my joints start an involuntary twitching alarmingly like the first stages of Saint Vitus's, I find myself resorting to counting games and intelligence tests, hoping they may speed the leaden time. One can name over the kings of England, or the plays of Shakspeare, or see how many lines of the "Skeleton in Armor" one remembers. I once invented an elaborate betting system with myself involving the ribbons and the colours of the horses who won them. But I had only myself to pay, and my winning had the same colourless triumph as gaining a king's row at solitaire. Then, there are a number of little optical illusions one can create with the rails and posts, but one is apt to come to looking cross-eyed.

THE PUZZLING PROGRAM

And so I turn to the program—very heavy and slippery and more difficult to find one's way about in than Brooklyn. It costs fifty cents, and I open it with the deluded idea it's worth it. On the first page is a picture of a motor; on the next, a modernistic study of an ocean liner; then a full page with the single word "Compliments," and I find myself murmuring "Thank you." I reach the fifteenth page and, with a sigh of satisfaction, begin a row of names that I take to be the committee, only to find I am reading the list of Trustees of the Dime Savings Bank. This is instructive, but hardly to the point. At length, I arrive at the heart of the volume and find some very bewildering information. The classes appear to have been numbered according to some unknown cabalistic system. We find Class 2 following on the heels (or should I say the hoofs?) of Class 21; 60 and 37 together in mystic system; and tucked away between Classes 8 and 59 is 42A. At a horse-show, one dare not ask anybody anything. To do so is worse than asking an Englishman who won the Derby and pronouncing Derby the way it's written.

It is entertaining to guess what the titles of the classes signify. I can, of course, understand "Light-Weight Hunters" and "Novice Saddle Horses" and even "Officer's Chargers." However, "Hackney Stallions, Three of the Get" bothers me, and I wonder who the strong man is who will exhibit "Heavy-Weight Hunters shown in Hand." I for long thought that "Harness Horses Shown to Runabouts" was a misprint, that the runabouts were to be shown to the horses, their subsequent reaction and behaviour determining the prizes. But this is merely an example of the horse patois.

The names of the horses are a keen disappointment to me. In my day (and just which day "my day" is, I never know), where I lived, horses were named "Pet" and "Gipsy" and "Rob Roy." Here, they're none other than "Blessington Parity," "Supreme Ulysses," and "Castle View Surprise"—awkward mouthfuls to call at a horse in a hurry. Imagine having to shout "Whoa! Castle View Surprise!" There are, of course, some shorter nomenclatures: "Blue Bottle," "Sassafras," and "Coca-Cola," which have at least distinction, even if their applicability to horse-flesh is somewhat obscure. Here is a whole family with an allegorical name like "Temptation." There are "Temptation Bonnie" and "Temptation Nipper," "Temptation Pride," and one that's just plain "Temptation." Everybody seems to know about them, and I gather that the Temptations are to the tan-bark what the Cadwaladers are to Philadelphia. Now and then, an owner goes Welsh and christens his poor beast "Taugh-a-Ballagagh" or something that even Lloyd George couldn't pronounce, and again we find one with a homy title—"Imported Susie," suggesting the Yukon and the women who don't care.

THE ENDLESS CIRCLE

"And why," sniffs the reader, "in all this time, don't you now and then watch the ring?" I do, now and then, with the ever-recurrent hope of seeing something new and exciting—something besides horses. Even a unicorn would be a diversion. But, no. The same endless flock are going around and around the ring like the soldiers in "Faust" who circle about the stage and back-drop. The same mournful judges are standing in the centre, pad and pencil in hand (I think they draw sketches of the entries). It is all dreary, and I feel morbid and misunderstood.

It is worse when I am forced to visit neighbouring boxes and motors replete with the people one sees only at horse-shows and never anywhere else. Where they stay the rest of the year is an enigma. As one knows naught of their natures save their horse life, conversation is limited. One can't say, "How did you enjoy the Guild this season?" or "Weren't you at the Colony last night?" nor do they seem particularly interested in the Naval Conference. I once ventured to ask a sporting gentleman if he'd seen "Sadko," and he replied, "No. Who's the owner?" I admitted I didn't know but added that he was by Rimsky-Korsakoff out of Gatti-Casazza, and that seemed to end the discussion. I generally find myself talking to an exhibitor so famous he does not enter his horses under his own name, but under some nom de plume like "The Tally-Ho Stables." I am apt to ask him if he is interested in horses just after three of his thoroughbreds have pranced out of the ring in the blue, red, and white ribbons. "Yes, that was my mare there," he murmurs modestly.

"Oh! So that was your mare!" I bleat. "Well! Yes, indeed! How awfully—er—you say that was your mare!"

By this time, he has either walked away or is talking to the horsy lady in the adjoining box.

I am told not to despair—that horses are an acquired taste like olives, and, given time, I shall learn about them. This is solacing, although I can think of any number of things I'd like to learn about before I get around to horses—backgammon, for instance, and Greek history (which I missed by changing schools), ice-skating, and astronomy. Somehow, I had never included horses in the category. Nor do I believe I could put my heart into the study. I asked a sporting friend why I should, why "going in" for horses was so noble, so clean, and generally commendable. He said it was because horses were real—they were among the things that counted. I knew only too well they were real, but added that the only horses I'd seen who counted was that trick pony, "Blackbear." He looked at me as if I had dishonoured my flag and told me I had no sense of values. He is probably right.

VOGUE'S GUIDE TO FASHION

of the most familiar landmarks that you will find; but sometimes what you think is a bolero will prove, on closer inspection, to be revers or a scarf. The slight width of a bolero often serves to throw into relief the slimmness of the waist.

Capes will be quite apt to get in your way, but you won't have to recognize them unless you wish. Some will be so well disguised that you may be unaware they are there.

 Sports clothes, in this Land of Elegance, will be relegated to actual sports wear and will be quite separate and distinct from the clothes for town. Built on a classic foundation, they will be simple and practical and designed for active use.

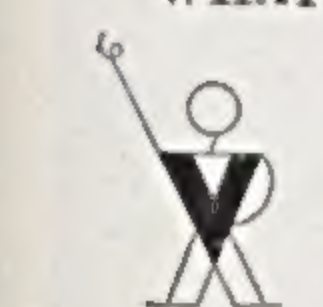

One-piece woollen dresses for spectator sports will go serenely on their way.

The sports coat starts off from the shoulders—usually with a raglan cut—and is apt to run in a straight or slanting line from there. The next thing you know, however, it will swing over into a wrap-around effect. Unlike the town coat, it may be three-quarters in length; and it usually gets along very well without fur.

 Most of the day fabrics that are being raised for the new season will thrive best in town. Town tweeds will only be smart in monotone weaves; soft woollens, in any case, will largely replace tweeds for morning wear; and satin and velvet dresses and suits will find the climate favourable in the late afternoon. There will be a great deal of broadcloth, practically all through the day.

Guide your course by very dark colours during the day: dark corbeau (crow) blue; dark, almost black green; deep wine-reds, dark reddish-brown and mahogany-browns and blackish-browns. Deep burnt-orange, yellowish and reddish ochres and orange-beige will often be a signal for sports. Midnight-blue-and-white will point a better way than black-and-white.

WHAT TO DO IN THE EVENING

 Many diversions will be open to you in the variety of the evening mode. It will be a highly sophisticated and intensely individual fashion, expressed in terms of great elegance and femininity.

The length of the silhouette will be interrupted and filled in by tunic effects and wrapped effects, by drapery, and by a suggestion of overskirts. Materials will be used in a more generous way.

Skirts, as a rule, will stop before they reach the floor. Just below the ankle-bone will be a good average length, and the informal dinner-dress will be an inch or two shorter.

Evening trains will not be worn before nine o'clock, and only on important occasions, then. They will be shorter than they were last year.

Asymmetrical treatment will be as good in the evening as in the day, and usually developed through the skirt by one-sided tunics and by unevenly distributed fulness.

Again we come around by the back way. Skirt fulness, bodice drapery, and décolletage treatment will often be concentrated in the back; and, generally speaking, the more important the dress, the more attention it will pay to this side.

Decorative hand-work or an attached draped scarf will frequently bring your interest up to the edge of the décolletage.

In this country, it will be a good fashion precaution to cover the top of the arms. Scarfs that are part of the dress itself and attached fichus and berthas serve this purpose very well.

Many dresses will be accompanied by short coats or wraps for inside wear.

Certain dresses will be built on very simple lines, so that they can offer lovely smooth surfaces for the beautiful hand-work that is coming back into the mode.

Some will be worked all over with a delicate, painstaking, and costly hand-embroidery; and others will be given great dignity and importance when skilfully patterned with beads—both large and small combined—to give a carved effect.

Some one may be clever enough to take beaded fringe and paillettes in hand and teach them to conform to the good manners of the mode.

A long wrap or coat will be your wisest choice for winter evening wear. The best of them will slip easily and naturally into the line of the silhouette, and they will gain in distinction from back interest and fur trimming that is handled like fabric. If you want a short coat, too, it should be hip-length and made up in fur.

Among the furs that wander abroad after dark, you will see ermine, mink, sable, and chinchilla—this last finding its place once again in the mode. Marten and fox will also prowl by night.

The rich, heavy, gleaming evening fabrics will be welcomed and made much of in this land: damasks, moires, lamé-scattered silks, plain lamés, satins, and velvets. The new velvets will have more substance and depth. Flat crêpes will not prove very fertile ground.

Jewel-like colours will shine along your path—ruby, coral, sapphire, emerald, turquoise, topaz. Flower-reds, wine-reds, oranges—dark and light—, deep grape-blues, and raisin-browns will be banked here and there. White will be as important as ever, and black will be more striking as it becomes more rare.

A MODERN DEVELOPMENT
IN THE INVESTMENT FIELD

A comparatively new idea is brought to American investors in the "fixed" investment trust.

Long established in European finance, this type of investment trust has won wide acceptance in this country the past few years. Its supporters claim, as one of its most interesting features, that it provides an additional factor of safety through its fixed plan for diversified reinvestment . . . the merits of which the prospective investor can thoroughly examine before actually investing his money.

Note dirt embedded in pores—undisturbed by surface cleansing. Causes blackheads and coarse, dull skin.

BELOW—PORE-DEEP CLEANSING

All dirt is removed. Pores are small. The skin becomes fine, clear, young!

"Clean out those dirty pores"

skin specialist warns women

"DIRTY PORES! They cause blackheads and pimples. They coarsen the skin. They dull the complexion. Even in the first stages they ruin your looks... make your appearance distasteful to men.

"I want you to look at your skin in a magnifying mirror. See those pin-points of black around the corners of the mouth... on the tip of the chin... on the cheeks, forehead, nose? Dirty pores! Old fashioned cleansing methods won't do. There's a new kind of dirt in the air today... greasy, black, machine-age dirt. It pours from the exhausts of automobiles, and from furnace chimneys. It falls on the skin in minute particles of grease, carbon, tar.

"These particles of greasy waste cling to the face, stick in the pores. Only thorough pore-deep cleansing will get them out... keep them from spoiling the skin."

Remove modern dirt with Ambrosia, the pore-deep liquid cleanser. You feel Ambrosia enter the pores, you know it is cleansing the skin as nothing has done before. New color comes in the cheeks... your face feels refreshed and young. Provides a one-minute facial for train, driving, or office use.
